Hudson River 300 Miles Long.

The entire length of the Hudson river is 300 miles. From Troy to the mouth of the river in New York bay, a distance of 150 miles, the river is tidal, owing to the low grade of its bed, by which the ocean tide is able to back up. It is this lower tidal navigable portion of the Hudson that is of so much importance and, of course, the water is salt. It is regarded really an estuary of the sea. Above Albany and Troy the river is a small stream and [illegible] the water is fresh.

THE DAIRY RATION

Feeding Tables Hard to Follow on Account of Variation of Ingredients.

[National Crop Improvement Service.]

For many years feeders have endeavored to use so-called standard tables showing the theoretical number of pounds each of so-called digestible protein, fats and carbohydrates. These methods are fatally defective for the following reasons:

First, the tables call for so much digestible food. If there was such a thing as digestible food it might furnish a basis to go by, but digestible food is really apparently digestible food, in that it disappears in the body. Just what use is made of it is not always clear. Some of it turns into gas, some is converted into heat, and much of it is used in the labor of digesting and handling the food. In the case of straw and similar material, nearly all of its energy is used up in the labor of digesting it, leaving little or no net gain. Straw should be returned to the soil. Take two samples of dried barley grains, each containing the same amount of digestible food, and one will give twenty more therms or heat units than the other.

One hundred pounds of digestible food derived from roughage is about equal to eighty pounds derived from grain, so if we add together things which are unlike, we get no tangible results. It is like adding so many pounds to so many gallons. So, the digestible basis of figuring rations is very inaccurate. The correct way is, first, to ascertain how much protein and energy a cow needs to sustain life and keep weight. You can get this from your experiment station, and ascertain how much is necessary to make one pound of milk of a certain fat test, and then feed her as much protein and energy as is needed to maintain her and supply food for as many pounds of milk as she can make.

This is a very difficult problem and few can do it, and we challenge any two men to tackle the same problem under the same conditions and arrive at the same result.

We cannot tell unless we try to find out, that a cow will not give more milk on more feed, or maybe as much milk on less feed. So feeding is largely experimental, as no two cows are alike.

However, the law of averages will hold, and the feeder can save all this trouble and much loss by feeding a ration which his experiment station has in most cases made, say three to four pounds of milk for each pound of mixed feed.

There is one thing certain. The more solids and fat in the milk, the more feed needed per pound of milk. So, a good mixed feed which is properly combined and all the roughage she will eat will greatly simplify your feeding problem and a very little experimenting will soon show you how much concentrates each cow needs to produce a maximum yield.

THE BEST DAIRY FEED

Those Grain From Which the Human Food Values Have Been Taken.

By Prof. F. D. Fuller.
[National Crop Improvement Service.]

The reason why the best dairy feeds are less expensive than the same grains on the farm is because the principal elements of human food are taken from these grains before they are ever made into feed. The by-products of cereal mills, glucose factories, malt houses, etc., constitute often more than 50 per cent of the total bulk of mixed dairy feeds of the better class.

These oats, barley and corn by-products are considered by experts in animal nutrition as very valuable feed materials. After these cereals are ground in the manufacture of alcohol, for which the use is growing more important daily in the arts, the solid residue is dried in vacuo, and is then known as "dried grains." If made from corn, these grains contain on an average of about 30 per cent crude protein and 10 per cent crude fat. If made from rye, while valuable, they are of somewhat lower feed value The barley residue contains over 70 per cent more crude protein than wheat bran and twice as much crude fat. In fact, their food value is largely increased by the process.

All these products are widely used by the best dairy feeders and are relied upon very extensively in milk production. There is no doubt of the fact that if the supply of these products were radically limited or entirely exhausted, it would have a serious effect upon the milk production throughout the country and the dairymen would have one more burden added to their already overtaxed strength.

Cottonseed meal is composed principally of the kernel, with such portion of the hull as is necessary in the manufacture of oil. Cottonseed meal, choice, must contain at least 41 per cent crude protein. It is one of the richest of all feeds in this substance and carries about 8 per cent crude fat. On account of its extreme concentration it can be fed only in limited quantities and always in conjunction with some products to furnish bulk. This meal is an important ingredient in many manufactured feeds.

HOME MIXED FEEDS.

[National Crop Improvement Service.]

When a man undertakes to mix his own rations, what does he do? He buys straight feeds. Take cottonseed meal as a common example. There are a great many different grades of cottonseed meal, and the man who is looking for a low-priced feed is sure to get a low grade. The demand for cheap feeding ingredients has caused the quality to be gradually whittled down. Consequently the farmer nearly always works with feeds which are poorer than he believes them to be. He does not get adequate state protection because inspectors do not go to a farmer's barn to draw samples, and even if they did, it would be hard to get a complete chain of evidence.

A farmer has no facilities for having his feed analyzed and he doesn't know what he is working with. The analyses of mixed feeds costs about [illegible] cents per ton, and if every farmer will read the various bulletins from the agricultural colleges he will soon know those brands which can be depended upon. There is no doubt that at the present prices of grain any farmer can save money by selling his cereal crops and buying mixed feed Cornmeal, oil meal and cottonseed meal are all high, but the by-products of barley and rye are all more reasonable in price.

Corn has become costly largely due to the demand for pork and beef. Americans will have those meats at almost any price This [illegible] on a meat basis, and the [illegible] will have to fall back on the by-products of grains.

GIVE COWS PLENTY OF WATER.

[National Crop Improvement Service.]

When cows are in full milk they require plenty of water. It is stated authoritatively that cows in full flow of milk will consume 50 per cent more water than when dry.

Poor feed sells to poor feeders.

Only that part of the feed that digest is of use—the rest is mostly fertilizer material.

No protein—no casein; no casein—no milk; not enough protein—not so much milk; also not enough feed—not so much food.

Foods with the highest protein and highest analysis are usually but not always the cheapest to use.

Cows won't make milk out of water and air.

[National Crop Improvement Service.]

Starchy feeds like corn and oats often sell as high as protein feeds because of the demand for them for horses and other work animals. Starchy feeds are also good to fatten steers. That is why they are often as high in price as dairy feeds, which are richer in protein.

[National Crop Improvement Service.]

Home-grown grains can often be profitably traded for protein feeds. While oats are generally demanded for horse feed, they are nearly always too expensive for dairy feed. Oats by-products, however, are very useful for bulk.

FARMER FEED EXPERTS.

[National Crop Improvement Service.]

A farmer who has devoted his lifetime to the study of feeding generally has more success through his common sense methods than any scientific analysis can supply. If such a feeder could have on hand all of the ingredients (most by-products of cereal manufacture), which according to the market at the time would be more economical, he could, through his experience, be very successful in mixing his feeds. But the difficulty with the average man is to maintain an economical ration from the products of his own farm.

He may be an expert, if he chooses to study out a new ration every time the market changes, but he generally prefers to let someone who makes a business of mixing feeds do it for him. No doubt the majority of users of mixed feeds begin to buy it because of a shortage of forage and grain crops on the farm.

If such a man will keep books he will find that as a usual thing the use of mixed stock feed is a mere matter of arithmetic whether he could buy the ingredients cheaper than he could buy them in a so-called "balanced" ration

MUST TASTE GOOD.

[National Crop Improvement Service.]

A dairy ration must, of all things, be palatable so that a cow will eat it. It must be bulky and coarse so as to avoid indigestion and sickness It must contain a variety of foods so that the cow will not tire of it or get off her feed. It must contain enough real protein—all protein is not alike. It must contain the right amounts and kinds of mineral substances necessary to life, health and milk secretion. It must be highly digestible. Many feeds are only about fifty to sixty per cent digestible and the work of excreting so much waste matter is costly in that it uses up the energy of the food to do it.

SUCCESSFUL FEEDING.

[National Crop Improvement Service.]

It is most significant and probably the best argument for mixed feeds when it is considered that a large number of the most prominent and skilled men in America have discarded their own mixed feeds and rations because they have found a satisfactory brand of feed which will make as much milk at less cost and no trouble and, above all, keeps cows in perfect health

Many agricultural schools and experiment stations use and have used them for the same reason.

You can verify this by writing to any experiment station and they will give you the names of mixed brands which are best adapted to your purpose.

FIVE POUNDS OF MILK ON ONE POUND OF GRAIN.

[National Crop Improvement Service.]

C. H Packard, of Delavan, Wisconsin, a progressive and practical dairyman, was not satisfied with his ration of home-grown feed. Although he mixed his ration with brains and it seemed to be theoretically correct, he thought he would try out his own mixture in comparison with a first class dairy feed. Much to his surprise he found that he could save about five lbs. of grain per cow per day and nearly 5 cents per cow He figured his own grain at prices much below the wholesale market and bought his mixed feed at retail

Also when his ration was figured according to [illegible] his mix[illegible] cost [illegible] with h[illegible]

EXPENSIVE PASTURE

When you stop to consider that an acre of pasture will feed a cow, but that that same acre will raise ten tons of silage during the time the cow is feeding on it, it would seem that a grass cafeteria would be the most expensive way to feed your stock

MORE FEED, MORE MILK.

[National Crop Improvement Service.]

Cows of a decided dairy type will return the greatest profit when fed to their full capacity —Nebraska Experiment Station

[National Crop Improvement Service.]

Ordinarily, silage will correct the tendency to costiveness When it is not sufficiently effective for this purpose, add enough old process oil meal to keep the droppings moderately soft, but not necessarily loose. Usually all that is needed is to increase the allowance of concentrates

There are always two sides to every question. If the government insists on more bran in flour, bossy will have to turn to still more artificial bran.

Wheat bran is a dear feed. Barley and rye by-products are more economical.

Poverty holds a mortgage on the feeder who can see nothing but the price. Some feeds are as cheap at $50 as other at $25 per ton.

When you buy hay for cows it usually costs more than grain by-products, although it costs half as much per ton.

[National Crop Improvement Service.]

It is a fair assumption that any farmer who talks against mixed feeds does not know what a mixed feed ought to be. There is no danger of any man buying a fraudulent feed. The state laws are very stringent on this point and if any man has any doubt as to the value of a feed, all he has to do is to write his State Experiment Station and get the truth.

THE AVERAGE REFORMER.

[National Crop Improvement Service.]

The average reformer having so little at stake himself, plunges about like a bull in a china shop, regardless of the results of his ardor.

An amusing incident is told of the Secretary of Commerce. The can manufacturers put up a howl that unless they could get tin-plate to make up, no canning of fruits and vegetables could be done, so without looking over the field it is said that an order was made that steel was to be diverted by the manufacturers from other projects and put at the disposal of the can manufacturers. It looked all right on the face of it, but when the manufacturers of harvesting machinery demanded steel which they contracted for, and found that there was not steel for aprons, it having been diverted to cans, a hurry-up call modifying the order was issued, so that our harvesting machines could be made in time for the growing crop.

This illustrates how many plans are ignorantly made robbing Peter to pay Paul. Every enthusiast who has a pet reform which is always hitting some other business instead of his own, never looks around to see what the effect will be before he plunges. The manufacturers of feed and the most successful feeders in the country have a right to demand that that delicate machine—the dairy cow—shall not be wrecked by hasty legislation.

Revolutionary reforms are seldom efficacious. Anything which disturbs the food equilibrium should be handled gradually. Experience has shown that the most efficient way to handle cereal products is to remove the human food first and feed the residue to stock Any other system is sheer extravagance.

WRONG FEEDING METHODS.

[National Crop Improvement Service.]

There is an old story about a ship captain who had a medicine chest. A sailor was sick and he found that No. 47 in his book was the indicated remedy, but alas! the bottle of No. 47 was empty, so he took equal parts of No. 40, which was strychnine, and No. 7, which was carbolic acid, and added them together and made No. 47 —and the sailor died

The application of this old story is that many a feeder will think that if a little of cottonseed or oilseed meal is good, a whole lot will be better. And like the man who put the green spectacles on the horse and fed him shavings—just after he got him trained the horse died

It is human nature to experiment in feeds, and the poor cow has to suffer for an overdose or an underdose before the proper ration is established.

DIFFICULT TO MIX FEEDS

A More Scientific Result Can Be Produced By Machinery.

[National Crop Improvement Service.]

As no two lots run alike, it is very difficult to mix straight by-products of oats, barley, rye, corn, cotton-seed, flaxseed, etc., by measure, because it is purely guessing Only a few years ago intentional fraud or unintentional carelessness was the rule. Before the feed laws were passed, each manufacturer adulterated all the trade would stand

Every car of feed sold to the consumer is not analyzed, and the farmer cannot become a feed expert because [illegible] laboratory Not one car out of five [illegible] is officially [illegible] In the old days [illegible] feeds [illegible] were no [illegible] of feed and more profitable cows and make the farmer poorer In those days the feed tables were wrong, the feeds didn't fit the tables; the digestible analysis method was incorrect; feed standards for animals were not agreed upon nor complete, the animals didn't fit the standards the buyer didn't know what was in the feeds he bought to mix, and there was an unavoidable variation in the concentration of the feed

These conditions have been largely overcome through the joint action of the government and state experiment stations and the mixed feed manufacturers who have every facility for maintaining a uniform product. By using these scientifically prepared feeds, many a herd has doubled its yield and profits. There are some painters who can buy lead, oil and dryer and mix and match their own color uniformly but the best painters of today have learned that mill-made brands are much better than anything they can mix with a paddle. The same is true in fertilizers to a great extent. In mixed feeds there can be no economy in home mixing because the mixing factories, being near the large markets, can utilize by-products to the very best advantage. Home mixing cannot be accomplished at one-tenth of a cent per lb., besides the result is never twice alike and cannot be without the help of a laboratory.

[National Crop Improvement Service.]

A practical test shows that eight tons of a first class dairy feed will replace 13 1-3 tons of farm grain, making a proportionate saving of about $20 per ton, and it also puts three times as much fertilizer back on the farm as is in the grain this farmer could sell.

[National Crop Improvement Service.]

There is no sense in hauling two loads of cheap feed when one load of high-grade feed will do the work and costs but three-fourths as much as the two loads.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven Catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only Constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. The DESTROYER

By BURTON E. STEVENSON

CHAPTER II CONTINUED

Pigot, meanwhile, had spread his men out along the docks, where they listened to every one, asked questions of every one. Not a rumor escaped them, but, alas, for no rumor could they find foundation. The wreck in the harbor was illuminated by the searchlights of the other battleships, and Pigot caused himself to be rowed out to it, introduced himself to Admiral Marin-Dabel, maritime prefect of Toulon, who had taken personal charge of the rescue work, and spent half an hour inspecting the melancholy scene. Then he landed again and listened for a time to the reports of his lieutenants. There was among them not a single ray of light not the slightest evidence to show that the disaster had been anything but an accident. The fire in the store room had, it was whispered, been much more serious than the officers would admit.

Pigot made his way slowly toward the hotel to report to his chief, but as he crossed the Place d'Armes, a hand was laid upon his sleeve. He turned, expecting to see one of his men. Instead, he found himself looking into a face he did not know.

"Pardon, sir," he said. "You are, perhaps, mistaken."

"Oh, no, Pigot," said the stranger, with a little smile. "I am not mistaken. It is you whom I wish to see."

"I do not remember you, sir," said Pigot, looking at him more closely. "Have we met before?"

"Many times."

"Many times!" echoed Pigot, incredulously. "Surely not!" and he looked again to assure himself that the stranger was not intoxicated. "Where have we met?"

"We met last," said the stranger, smiling again, "on the Liberte in the harbor of New York. To be sure, I was in disguise, but I am sure you will recall the incident."*

*See "The Mystery of the Cabinet."

Pigot drew away, and his face flushed.

"Ah," he said quickly, after a moment. "I remember. Good evening, M. Crochard."

"One moment," Crochard demanded, his grasp tightening on Pigot's arm. "For [illegible] calling that meeting to order. It was indeed [illegible]. Nevertheless you would do well to listen to what I have to say."

Pigot stopped and turned.

"Well," he said, after glancing for a moment into Crochard's eyes, "speak quickly. What is it you have to say?"

"I wish to say to you, Pigot, that I have come to offer you my help."

"Your help?"

"In solving the mystery of this disaster."

Pigot looked at him coldly.

"We do not require your help," he said, at last.

"Perhaps not, and yet you would be mistaken to refuse it. I was at Nice, I have been on the ground since morning, I have discovered * * *"

"Well, what have you discovered?" asked Pigot, as Crochard hesitated.

"I have discovered," Crochard continued slowly, "what I can reveal only to M. Delcasse himself. I demand that you cause me to be introduced to him at once."

Pigot shrugged his shoulders impatiently.

"Impossible!" he said, and started on.

"Wait!" said Crochard sternly. "Consider whether you are willing to take the responsibility of this refusal!"

"Responsibility!" Pigot burst out, his anger getting the upper hand at last. "Responsibility! Yes, I take it! Who are you? A notorious character—a thief * * *"

Crochard's eyes were blazing, and his hand grasped Pigot's arm with a vise like grip.

"And with it all," he sneered, "a better man than you Pigot! Is it not so? A better man than you! How often have I proved it!"

Pigot's hand turned and closed like a flash upon the other's wrist.

"You will come with me," he said.

The anger faded from Crochard's face, and an ironic amusement took its place.

"Where would you conduct me?" he asked.

"To the prefecture!"

"You are mistaken. You will conduct me to M. Delcasse. You cannot conduct me to the prefecture, Pigot; I will not allow it!"

"Allow it!" sneered Pigot, and pressed forward.

"Fool!" hissed Crochard in his ear. "Thickheaded fool! Have you learned no wisdom yet? I would smite you, Pigot, but that I have need of you. Listen! I and only I can save France! I demand that you take me to M. Delcasse."

Pigot felt himself waver; a vague uneasiness stirred within him as he met his companion's flaming gaze.

"On what pretext can I introduce you to M. Delcasse?" he asked at last.

"You will leave me outside the door," said Crochard rapidly, almost in a whisper. "You will go in to M. Delcasse alone; you will say to him, 'Sir, I have outside a man who asserts that La Liberte was blown up by the Germans, and that he can prove it!' Then let M. Delcasse decide whether or not he will receive me!"

Pigot was staring at the speaker with distended eyes.

"By the Germans!" he repeated hoarsely. "By the Germans!"

Crochard answered with an impatient pressure of the arm.

"You are wasting time," he said.

"You are right," Pigot agreed. "Come with me," and he led the way across the square.

CHAPTER III.

TWO GREAT MEN MEET

M. Delcasse and M. Lepine were still in conference when Pigot was announced. He was admitted without delay and made his report briefly and clearly. It could have been summed up in a sentence [illegible] by him nor by his agent [illegible] having been discovered to [illegible] even remotely, that the [illegible] had been the result of [illegible] every rumor to that effect [illegible] and discredited and dismissed [illegible] had been done [illegible] watcher and not from [illegible]

[illegible] a practical detective had to [illegible] in intuition but [illegible] as thoughts may have [illegible] managed to mask them behind an impenetrable countenance.

"Our investigations have but just begun," Lepine pointed out. "They will be continued without pause. I will conduct them in person. No circumstance, however trivial, will be overlooked."

"I know you are a good man, Lepine," said the minister wearily. "I know there is none more clever. But something more than cleverness is needed here—we need genius, inspiration. He stopped abruptly and rose from his chair. "I am sure you will do your best. Remember, if there is any discovery, I am to be told at once."

Pigot, who had been standing with lips compressed, undergoing a violent inward struggle, at last managed to open them.

"I have a man outside," he said, as though repeating a lesson, "who requests an audience with M. Delcasse. He asserts that La Liberte was blown up by the Germans, and that he can prove it."

Delcasse whirled as on a pivot and stared at the speaker.

"But, name of God!" he stammered, barely able to speak for excitement, "why have you not introduced this man at once? Why have you wasted our time * * *"

He stopped and took a rapid turn up and down the room. When he spoke again, his voice was quite composed.

"Introduce the man at once," he commanded.

"I think it would be well," said Pigot tonelessly, "that M. Delcasse should first be informed as to the name and character of this man."

"What were they?"

Again Delcasse stared.

"Explain yourself!" he cried. "Who is the man?"

"His name is Crochard, sir," Pigot replied.

Delcasse evidently did not recognize the name, but Lepine's face was suddenly illumined.

"Crochard," he explained, "is the most adroit, the most daring, the most accomplished scoundrel with whom I have ever had to deal. Surely Monsieur remembers the affair of the Michaelovitch diamonds?"

"Ah, yes!" cried Delcasse, his face, too, lighting. "So that was Crochard!"

"Crochard the Invincible, he calls himself," growled Pigot. "He is a great braggart."

"And with some reason," added Lepine. "We have never yet been able to convict him."

"He restored the Mazarin diamond to the Louvre, did he not?" queried the minister. "And also the Mona Lisa?"

"The Mazarin certainly," assented Lepine. "As for the Mona Lisa, I have never been quite certain. There is a rumor that the original is now owned by an American millionaire, and that the picture returned to the Louvre is only a copy—a wonderful one, it is true. Where did you meet him, Pigot?"

Pigot related the story of the meeting, while Delcasse listened thoughtfully.

"Is he to be trusted?" he asked, when Pigot had finished.

"In this affair I believe so," answered Lepine quietly. "He may be as good a patriot as you or I. If he is really in earnest, he can be of immense assistance. He has absolute command of the underworld, and a thousand sources of information which are closed to the police. At least, it can do no harm to hear what he has to say."

Delcasse agreed with a nod, and sat down again.

"Bring him in," he said, and a moment later Crochard entered.

If M. Delcasse had expected to perceive anything of the criminal in the man who bowed to him respectfully from the threshold, he was most thoroughly disappointed. What he did see was a well built man in the very prime of life, with clear and fearless eyes of greenish-gray flecked with yellow, a face singularly open and engaging, and a manner as easy and self possessed as Delcassee's own. The only sign of approaching age was the sprinkle of gray in the crisp, brown hair, but this served rather to accentuate the youthfulness of the face, covered now by a coat of tan which bespoke a summer spent in the open. In any company, this man would have been notable.

"M. Crochard, I believe," said Delcasse, and involuntarily the great minister arose and returned his visitor's bow. "Be seated, sir."

"Thank you," said Crochard, and sat down. "I see that we are going to appreciate each other," he added and looked at Delcasse with a friendly smile.

That gentleman's eyes were twinkling behind his glasses, and his lips twitched under his heavy moustache.

"It always pleases me to meet a distinguished man," he said, "in whatever field of endeavor. M. Lepine tells me that you are most distinguished."

"M. Lepine has every reason to know," agreed Crochard, and glanced smilingly toward the prefect.

"Though, since I have eyes, I can see that for myself," added the minister. "Why did you wish to see me?"

"I wished to see you, sir," answered Crochard, suddenly serious, "because I have long recognized in you the only man whom France possesses who sees clearly the struggle which is ahead of her, who prepares ceaselessly for that struggle, and who is strong enough to guide her through it triumphantly."

"To what struggle do you refer?" inquired the minister, but his shining eyes belied his careless tone.

"The struggle to regain possession of Alsace-Lorraine and to avenge ourselves upon the nation which once humiliated us."

A slow flush crept into Delcasse's cheeks, and his lips tightened.

"You foresee such a struggle?" he asked.

"As clearly as you do yourself, sir."

"Well, yes;" cried Delcasse, and smote the arm of his chair a heavy blow. "I do foresee such a struggle—I have never denied it; and for 20 years I have labored to prepare for it. You can understand, then, what a blow it is to me—how terrible, how disheartening—to have all my calculations blasted by such accidents as that of today!"

"Pardon me, sir," said Crochard, in a low tone, "but the destruction of La Liberte was not an accident!"

"You assert that?"

"I do. And furthermore, I assert that it was the work of Germany!"

Delcasse sprang from his chair, his face livid.

"The proof!" he cried. "The proof!"

"The proof, sir, is this: at five minutes before dawn, this morning, two strangers, attired as pedestrians, with knapsacks on their backs, stopped in the recess of the doorway of Number Ten, Quai de Cronstadt. They stepped well within the shadow, as though not wishing to be seen, and stood gazing out on the harbor. Directly before them, at a distance of not more than 300 yards, La Liberte was moored. It was at her they stared, with eyes expectant and uneasy. At dawn, La Liberte blew up, and one of these men cried out some words of German."

"What were they?"

"Unfortunately the person who overheard them does not know German. He understood only the first two words, 'Ach Gott!'"

"And the men?" cried Delcasse. "What became of them?"

"They strode rapidly away along the quay, and were lost to sight."

Delcasse dropped into his chair, his face dark with passion.

"What do you infer from this circumstance?" he demanded.

"There is only one possible inference," answered Crochard. "At five minutes before dawn this morning, there were, in this city of Toulon, two Germans who knew that La Liberte was to be destroyed."

A moment's silence followed. Those words, terrible as thy were, astounding as they were, carried conviction with them.

"Tell me," said Delcasse, at last, "how you discovered all this."

"I have been spending the month at Nice," Crochard explained. "I learned of the disaster as soon as I was up this morning, and I came at once to Toulon. Monsieur will understand that, in the many years during which I have been at variance with society, I have made many friends and gained a certain power in quarters of which monsieur knows little. One of these friends is the proprietor of the cafe which occupies the ground floor of the house on the Quai de Cronstadt. I stooped to see him because his house is close to the scene of the disaster—so close, indeed, that all of its windows were shattered. It was he who gave me the first clue."

"Go on," said Delcasse, who had been listening intently. "I need not say how deeply all this interests me."

"My friend had arranged to go to Marseilles this morning," Crochard continued, "to make a purchase of wine. The train, he tells me, leaves at 6 o'clock. It was about 15 minutes before that hour when, as he started to open his door, two men stepped into the little vestibule, as though to screen themselves from observation. He peered through the curtain, thinking they might be friends, and found that he did not know them. Gazing from the darkness of the interior, he could see them very well. They were staring at La Liberte, as I have said, their faces rigid with emotion; and then came the explosion, which, without question, they anticipated."

"You have a description of them?" broke in Delcasse.

"An excellent description. They were men of middle age, heavily built and clean shaven. Their faces were deeply tanned, as with long exposure, and had that fulness about the lips which bespeaks the German. They wore caps and walking suits with knee trousers. Each had strapped upon his back a small knapsack."

Lepine, who had been taking rapid notes, looked up with gleaming eyes.

"We shall find these men," he said. "It will not be difficult."

"More dificulty than you suppose, M. Lepine," said Crochard dryly.

Lepine looked at him.

"What do you mean?" he asked.

Crochard turned to Delcasse with a little deprecating gesture.

"Before I proceed," he said, "I must be certain of my position here. With you, sir, no explanations are necessary; we understand each other and we have no past to prejudice us. But M. le Prefect and I are old enemies. We respect each other, but we always welcome an opportunity to try conclusions. Until this affair is ended, I propose a truce."

"I will go further than that," retorted Lepine, "and call it an alliance. I shall welcome your help. I have already told M. Delcasse that you are probably as good a patriot as he or I."

WHAT CAN THE BOYS AND GIRLS DO?

By Henry Churchill King.

They can do their best to keep in vigorous health, that they may serve their country the better in all ways open to them.

They can be careful to avoid waste of food, money and property.

They can help increase the supply of food by work in home gardens.

They can share without grumbling in such sacrifices and extra work as many be needed in their homes on account of the war.

They can most faithfully reverence and obey the laws of the community, state and nation and do their best to help others to a like respect and reverence.

They can be fair, honest and kind to others, and bravely stand for the right, and so help to make this country truly "the land of the free and the home of the brave."

They can be sure that God is working out some great purpose for all men in this great world war, and they can pray that a true brotherhood of all men may result—such a brotherhood as Christ sought.

They can do what the young Athenians promised to do for Athens—they can cherish the ideal and sacred things of the country, and they can strive unceasingly in all ways to transmit this country, not less, but greater, better, and more beautiful than it was transmitted to them.

How to Write a Moving Picture Play.

Pick out a good garden with shrubbery and flowers.

Put an attractive girl in the garden.

It must be a windy day and the wind must blow her hair about her face.

Have a young man emerge from the shrubbery and clasp her in his arms.

Have her father come out and drive him away.

Have the young man come back by moonlight. Just write here "Blue tinted film to represent night."

Have the young man and girl elope.

Have father chase them in another auto.

Have them ride miles and miles, pursued by irate father.

Have them stop at a parson's and be married.

Do not bother with a marriage license. They are never used in movies.

Have father overtake them as they come out man and wife.

Have father forgive them and they all go back home.

Now go over your scenario and eliminate any shred of a plot.

Send it away and give the scenario editor time enough to have a staff member crib the good scenes and ideas and make a movie from them.

The scenario editor will return it to you.

And there you are!

Tobacco Ash Valuable.

From the Washington Star.

It appears that smokers are throwing away annually about 8,000 tons of valuable material, the same being the ashes of the tobacco that they consume.

The ash left on burning tobacco is considered and, as a matter of fact, the mineral matter of the tobacco leaf frequently amounts to as much as a fifth part of its weight. Thus a ton of tobacco leaf would yield 400 weight of ash, which represents valuable mineral constituents withdrawn from the soil which have to be replaced by abundant manuring.

It has been calculated that a ton of tobacco withdraws more than a 100 weight of mineral constituents per acre of land. This would appear to be an astounding waste of material, which must be of enormous value to the soil, considering that 75 per cent consists of calcium and potassium salts and 15 per cent of magnesium and sodium salts, including nearly 5 per cent of the essential constituent to all plants—phosphoric acid.

The Old Ways.

From Tit-Bits.

A simple young man was invited out to dinner one evening, and it fell to his lot to take in a lady of a very vivacious temperament.

The lady did her best during the meal to make Mr Simpleton talk, but elicited nothing more satisfactory from him than monosyllables. As a matter of fact, Mr. Simpleton was feeling very much bored.

Dessert came and, as a last effort at conversation, the lady said:

"Oh, Mr. Simpleton, do you like bananas?"

The young man appeared to be thinking deeply for a few moments, and then answered:

"Er—no, no I think I prefer the old-fashioned nightgown!"

"I think I'll join a 'shut-in' society," whinned the woman who imagines she is a hopeless invalid.

Sir Edward Carson Tells How Young Man Got Into the British Army.

Sir Edward Carson introduced a personal note into a speech which he made the other day when he was guest of the British Empire Produce organization, at the Savoy hotel, the London Chronicle.

"I remember," said Sir Edward, "when a little son of mine came to me and said 'Father, I want to join the navy class at school.' I said, 'Don't rubbish! You are going to be a lawyer.' He told me plainly that I was wrong, and I explained to him how much better it would be to make laws in the Temple than lose it all. He said, 'You don't seem to realize the importance of the navy; it is the great connecting link between the mother country and the colonies.'

"I replied, 'Well, if you put it on that high plane, I must alter my views.' He is now commanding a submarine, and only yesterday, in my capacity as first lord of the admiralty, I had to read an account of an attempt on the part of our destroyers to sink his submarine."

Causes of Nervousness.

There is an article on the care of children in the Woman's Home Companion in which the writer says:

"Nervousness sometimes is the result of some personal defect. Malnutrition, anemia, defective eyesight, teeth or adenoids may be the predisposing cause. Nature offers the best cure. Plenty of nourishing food, wholesome outdoor life are essential, and these children should be encouraged to play and to take regular exercise, such as walking, rowing, swimming. Real country life is perhaps the best, and camping is a cure in itself, first for the outdoor life and healthful exercise, and, second, because the nervous child needs the companionship of other children."

Value of Deep Breathing.

Every man can live five years longer if he will take from twenty to thirty deep breaths of fresh air every day. Not the way we usually breathe, but real deep breaths; counting ten slowly, take in the breath through your nostrils, count ten more while you hold it, and then exhale while you are letting it out. No single rule is so infallible for good health. I know this from personal experience. For the moment I feel "stuffed up" or realize a "cold" is coming, I breathe deeply and almost invariably ward off the cold. Deep breathing starts the circulation, and where good circulation exists there can be no "cold."—Ladies' Home Journal.

Self-Evident.

"Please, lady," begged the very seedy tramp at the back door, "can you help a poor man that lost his job two weeks ago and ain't been able to get no work since?"

"What sort of a job was it?" asked the lady.

"I was workin' in a soap factory."

The Danger Zone for Many Is Coffee Drinking

Some people find it wise to quit coffee when their nerves begin to "act up."

The easy way nowadays is to switch to

Instant Postum

Nothing in pleasure is missed by the change, and greater comfort follows as the nerves rebuild.

Postum is economical to both health and purse.

"There's a Reason"

Horse Is Most Pampered Being on Western Front

With the British Armies in France (by mail)—It would be difficult to find a more pampered lot of beings than the war horses. In the stress of battle they suffer with the men, but the number of equine "casualties" among the hundreds of thousands of horses employed is really very small.

There are veterans among the horses who have been three or four times wounded, there are even those who have suffered nervous breakdowns from the shattering shock of shells. If they were men in khaki they would have gold stripes of honor upon their sleeves, but the faithful old horses go back to the front time and time again asking nothing in the way of rank or distinction.

What they get instead is the very best of food and plenty of it, the kindest of care and the keenest appreciation of the services they render. Visitors to the battle zone invariably express amazement at the appearance and condition of the horses. Just now they are snug and warm under the self protection of their long winter coats. They are fat and strong muscled. They plod and splash contentedly through the mud in twos, threes, fours or twelves, dragging guns and heavy wagons behind them with never the necessity of a harsh word or a whiplash from their drivers. The men come to love the horses. Officers who have been from the beginning, and there are still a few left, say that in all that time they have never seen an act of cruelty toward horse or mule.

One reason for the splendid appearance of the horses at the front is the fact that the moment one begins to show signs of over-fatigue or debilitation, he is taken out of service and sent back to a hospital to recuperate. Occasionally, too, the horses come down with mud blisters upon their backs, with an injured foot that may not have been noticed in time, or with some of the diseases that equine flesh is heir to. It is a great tribute to the veterinary services, however, that most of the old contagious diseases that used to decimate the ranks of horses in war time, have been effectually stamped out and no longer give concern. Glanders, for instance, once a dread scourge, is now a thing of the past. None of the horses in France is infected. Occasionally a case comes with a new shipment from abroad, but it is quickly eliminated.

At the end of two years of the South African war fully 90 per cent of the horses had been affected by the mange. During two years and a half of the present war, with the number of horses engaged multiplied by thousands, less than 2 per cent have been affected. The mules have been even less involved. As a matter of fact the mules are so tough and hardy they seldom enter into the veterinary statistics.

The hospitals provided for them by the army must very nearly approach the horse's idea of heaven. It is a joy to go into one of the convalescent "wards," especially at meal times. Sometimes the convalescents stand almost nose to nose, and if the horse across the way gets his hay first there is a terrible hullabaloo. A particularly ravenous patient now and then will not only eat his portion of hay but the rope net that surrounds it. A few nights ago one had such a healthy appetite he tried to eat the blanket off his nearest neighbor.

All the horses in hospital are fed four times a day. The more debilitated ones are fed five and six times. When they are particularly run down and in danger of being mistaken for sort of bone-yard hat-racks, the patients get nothing but cooked foods, and they fairly revel in them. They have tonics, too, and it is remarkable to see the improvement in their condition that a few weeks work. The diet for "debilities" consists of oatmeal gruel, linseed gruel, boiled turnips and scalded oats. Later they get crushed oats and chopped hay, and almost before they know it are in the convalescent ward.

The operating rooms with their big beds spread upon the concrete floors, are as cheery and immaculate as if intended for human beings. For all except the most minor operations an anaesthetic is administered.

"The horses take the chloroform remarkably well," said the officer commanding one of the hospitals to the correspondent of the Associated Press. "I don't think we have lost but one patient in the last six months," he added.

"Patient" seems a most appropriate designation for the horses. They are very pictures of patience until they reach the stage of convalescence. Each patient has a little aluminum tag and a hospital chart which tells his age, color, where he came from, what he shall have to eat and drink and take, when he shall have a nice hot bath and various notations as to his condition and behavior. There is a personal touch about the treatment of the horses which in itself bespeaks the esteem in which they are held. Walking about the wards, the "O. C." had a kind word or two for his patients. It seemed a particularly human thing to do. And he patted most of them and called many by name.

"This old charger," he said of one, "is a great favorite in the hospital. He has been one of the bravest of the brave, has lost an eye in battle, and so we call him Nelson. I am going to send to Paris and get him a good glass eye before he goes back to the front, so none of the other horses will have a chance to 'swank' it over him. It won't really be a glass eye, because they are made of a composition not so fragile. The horses do not mind the artificial eyes at all and they look awfully well in them."

So thorough is the work of the veterinary service that if a patient develops a contagious disease all the horses in the unit from which he came are called in for disinfection and examination. So successful is the work that 82 per cent of all sick cases and casualties are returned to active service.

If we were dealing with human beings," said the officer commanding, "we could run the percentage up to the 90s. But unfortunately in dealing with the horses we have at times to weigh their cases in the scales of pounds, shillings and pence. In other words, we have to decide whether it will pay to save the animal. Is he too old to be of much use when he is cured or will the costs of treatment be so long and expensive as to outweigh the value of his usefulness? In striving for war efficiency and the highest potentiality of horse power all these things must be considered. It is the old, old story, but one of the survival of the fittest. There is no other way."

Some idea of the number of American horses lost on their journey to the war can be had from the fact that 40 per cent of all sent to hospital come from the United States.

THE ISLAND OF LESBOS

Washington, D. C.—The island of Lesbos, whose inhabitants were not far behind the Cretans in expressing in revolutionary outburst their dissatisfaction with the failure to throw the weight of Greek arms into the scales of war on the side of the entente allies, is the subject of a timely war geography bulletin issued by the National Geographic society, from its headquarters in Washington which says:

"Lesbos, often called Mytilene after the island's famous capital and chief city, lies on the eastern edge of the Aegean sea, separated from the shores of Asia Minor by a channel which at its narrowest point is not more than seven miles across. That part of the mainland was known in ancient times as Troad (the land of Troy) and in Homeric legend Lesbos was given as one of the bounds of the region ruled by King Priam. It lies almost midway between Smyrna and the Dardanelles.

"The area of Lesbos is about 675 square miles, (60 square miles larger than the Isle of Pines, off the coast of Cuba), and its surface is a succession of well-wooded mountains and fertile valleys. The shallow Gulf of Kalloni, entering from the southwest, almost cuts the island in two. Mt. Olympus, on the southern promontory, reaches an elevation of more than 3,000 feet.

"In ancient days Lesbos was famous for its wines, its oils and its grain, but the vineyards are no longer especially productive. The olive is now the chief product of the island, and much of the oil of this fruit is converted into soap and exported. Figs, almonds, cattle and hides are other articles of commerce, also the acorns of the valonia oak, extensively used in tanning and in the preparation of vegetable dye stuffs.

"Although 90 per cent. of the island's population of 130,000 is Greek, the territory was under Turkish rule until three years ago when Greece assumed control, following the second Balkan war. The Turk came into possession of the island in the middle of the 15th century when Mohammed II wrested it from the descendants of the Genoese noble, Francesco Gattilusis, who had received it from the Byzantine emperors in 1354.

"Besides the famous struggles over the city of Mytilene, several important marine engagements have been fought in the waters adjacent to Lesbos, notably those in which the Venetians defeated the Turks in 1690-98, and the Greeks bested the same power in 1821.

"In addition to Pittacus, one of the Seven Sages of Greece, and Sappho, the greatest woman poet of the ancients, Lesbos' hall of fame boasts of Terpander, the founder of Greek classical music and of lyric poetry and a famous composer of drinking songs; Alcaeus, poet and inventor of the Alcaic stanze, much used by Horace and Theophrastus, the famous philosopher and pupil of Aristotle whom the latter named as guardian of his children and to whom he bequeathed the Aristotelean library and original works. After Aristotle's death Theophrastus presided over the Peripatetic school for 35 years, up to the time of his death in 287 B. C., when he was given a public funeral in Athens and mourned by the entire populace. Lesches, author of 'The Little Iliad,' a continuance of the Homeric epic from the death of Hector through the incidents relating to the contest of Ulysses and Ajax over the armor of Achilles, was also a native of Lesbos, having been born at Pyrrha, one of the five towns which gave the island the name of Pentapolis in the early days of its colonization by the Aeolians from Boeotia.

Altering An Old Kansas Song.

From the Kansas City Star.

There was an old song that used to be sung of Kansas. Never true of course it was sung in the days of Kansas adversity when the "folks back east" were sending their second hand clothing and other articles of aid to the relatives in the new state.

Oh potatoes they grow small
Out in Kansas
Oh potatoes they grow small,
And they eat them skins and all,
Out in Kansas.

But Kansas raised 4,301,063 bushels of potatoes last year and it wasn't a good year for potatoes, either.

This year Kansas literally has fields of potatoes to where it had gardens of them last year. Barring the danger of too much moisture and too many bugs—always a menace to potatoes—Kansas likely will raise this year close to 10,000,000 or 12,000,000 bushels of "spuds." The crop last year was valued at almost $4,000,000 and that is not a figure to be sneezed at in times of emergency. But with potatoes rated among the luxuries of life this year the Kansas crop ought to take a high place among the "valuable crops" of the state.

Heretofore Kansas has nearly "dabbled" in potatoes. Practically one-half its crop last year was raised in from 15 to 20 counties—Wyandotte, Shawnee, Johnson, Brown, Leavenworth, Marshall, Nemaha, Jewell, Douglas, Smith, Lyon, Phillips, Republic, Pottawatomie, Jefferson and Washington. Fourteen counties had more than 1,000 acres last year and three had more than 2,000 acres.

There is no probability of the potato crop being a contender for the "crown" in Kansas as yet. King Corn and King Wheat and King Alfalfa are all secure so far as their place as the ruling crops of the state are concerned, but a big crop of potatoes this year will not only help Kansas do its "bit" toward feeding the world but will show the state the possibilities of a real crop which, heretofore, has been regarded as nothing but "garden truck" in that state. It may get Kansas ready to really "go in" for potatoes next year.

Kansas could multiply its present acreage of potatoes several times and hardly miss the ground they would occupy.

PREFER WAR INVESTMENTS.

Tokio, (by mail.)—The subscriptions to the new railway bonds, which the Japanese government has just floated on behalf of the imperial government railways, total about $21,472,675, according to a statement issued by the Bank of Japan. Subscriptions from the public were under $10,000,000. The rest of the bonds were assigned to the underwriting banks. General investors, anticipating the issue of entente loans at more advantageous terms, have apparently been unwilling to take up the issue.

Time to Revive It.

From the Montgomery Journal.

Way back yonder it was customary for subscriptions to be paid in chickens, eggs, hams, wool, wool, apples, sweet potatoes, butter, or any other article raised on the farm. The plan worked all right in the days of long ago, and it looks like it is going to become popular with the rural press again. It is a good sign when a man wants his weekly paper bad enough to be willing to bring in a bag of sweet potatoes, goobers, or other things with which to reimburse the editor.

The Secret.

The south wind told the brooklet,
As over the field he blew;
The brooklet told the rushes;
Who whispered it to the dew;
The dewdrops told the robin
(Who never could keep a thing!)—
He perched all day on a blossoming spray,
And warbled, "It's spring! It's spring!"
—From the May St. Nicholas.

TRY TO RE-ESTABLISH RIVER NAVIGATION

St. Louis, Mo.—Attempts to revive freight and passenger traffic on the Mississippi river between St. Louis and New Orleans are being made by two companies, one a freight, the other a passenger carrier.

The freight company's barge has a capacity of 1,400 tons, a complete refrigerating plant, is equipped with a wireless outfit and is propelled by four Diesel engines. The company has under construction two additional barges of this type and expects to have them in service about the middle of May.

According to its general manager, this company is operated under the "express system," that is it delivers shipments "right to the door" and assumes full responsibility until deliveries are made. All shipments are covered fully by insurance.

The traffic manager of the second company says shippers were somewhat skeptical as to the success of plans for the revival of the St. Louis-New Orleans traffic because several attempts in that direction have failed. Despite this condition the first trip showed a clear profit.

"We do not expect to be swamped with shipments immediately," he said, "but as soon as proper terminal facilities are provided to allow us to get freight to the river with a minimum amount of switching, and cooperation between shippers and carriers is established a steady stream of traffic is assured."

If conditions warrant it, he added, other steamers will be put in operation.

Men who have made a study of river problems say that the most important thing to be done if river navigation is revived on a large scale is to build adequate docks, with rapid loading and unloading facilities.

St. Louis has appropriated $200,000 for such a dock; and New Orleans has elaborate docking facilities. In most towns between St. Louis and New Orleans, however, little in this direction actually has been done, but public interest in the topic has been aroused.

The old time river packets that now run up and down the Mississippi river are forced at most points to load and unload with the methods in use in antebellum days. Negro deck hands carry the cargo on and off the boat, a package at a time, and the fuel coal is taken on board in wheelbarrows.

This system of loading freight is expensive, and as a result a large part of the freight carried by the river packets is for towns that have inadequate railway facilities.

For several years the Missouri river has been navigated as far as Kansas City. A Kansas City boat and barge line maintains regular service in the open season between Kansas City and St. Louis and Kansas City has a large, mechanically equipped dock.

While river navigation is not anything like it was many years ago, it is by no means extinct. Regular trips are made between St. Louis and St. Paul; between St. Louis and Tennessee river points, up the Illinois river to Peoria; and south to Cairo and Memphis. This is in addition to the St. Louis-New Orleans service, which was resumed last summer.

New Russian Railroad Lines.

From the Youth's Companion.

In spite of, and even because of, the war, the Russian government is pushing the construction of new railroad lines that are likely to be of strategic or commercial importance to the empire. The Altai railroad, which will serve the need of the richest agricultural and mineral region of Siberia, is now complete and open for traffic. It is about 500 miles long and connects Nikolaevsk, on the trans-Siberian railroad, with Semipalatinsk, in the Steppes provinces, passing through Barnaul, in the Tomsk government of Siberia. The Altai region has deposits of gold, silver, lead, zinc and copper that were worked in the Eighteenth and Nineteenth centuries, but were abandoned for lack of transportation facilities and for other reasons. Since then Russia has obtained those minerals from abroad, chiefly from her obliging neighbor, Germany. The Altai region also contains an exceptionally rich coal basin, which covers an area of about 6,000 square miles. The new railroad will revive the neglected mining industries and deliver coal and coke in the Ural region, which needs them badly. It is possible, too, that the Russian government will soon build a foundry to supply metal for the projected South Siberian trunk line that is to penetrate the Kirghiz steppes, a region of exceptional mineral wealth.

SEA SOLDIERS GOOD SHOTS

There Is a Story From Vera Cruz That Tells of the Marksmanship of Uncle Sam's Marines.

The marines know how to handle a rifle; 50 per cent of the force are qualified; listed shots. There is a story from Vera Cruz that tells of good shooting and a sure eye. Henry Reuterdahl writes in the Youth's Companion.

Our bluejackets were marching up the street from the plaza between rows of low two-story houses. A well-dressed Mexican, with a newspaper over his knee, was sitting on the balcony of his house, apparently intent on watching our sailors advance; but hidden under the paper he held a big revolver, and as our men went by he fired. The bullets were striking, but our officers could hardly suspect a well-dressed Mexican, reading a paper and looking peacefully on from his own house, of being the sniper.

Dropping his paper, the Mexican went inside to reload. When he came out again on the balcony the glint of the gun caught the attention of Lieutenant Colonel Neville on horseback in the plaza, 1,000 or more yards away. Through his eight-power fieldglass the colonel saw plainly the flash of the shots under the newspaper.

"Get him," he said, turning to his orderly.

The man raised his rifle, pressed the trigger—and the Mexican fell out of his chair.

"Got him, sir," said the marine.

De Profundis.

At the summer training camp at Plattsburg last summer an undersized "rookie" was one day struggling along through mud that threatened to engulf him and his pack. The company were singing, and when they came to the chorus he joined in with growls and grumbles that seemed to come from well down toward his belt. Beyond doubt, melody was not his forte. A big, hulking sergeant came along.

"What's the matter? What are you howling about?"

"I'm singing bass," explained the "rookie."

"Don't do it, my boy," said the sergeant; "you're too deep down already. You come up to surface and get the air."—Youth's Companion.

FRECKLES

Now Is the Time to Get Rid of These Ugly Spots.

There's no longer the slightest need of feeling ashamed of your freckles, as the prescription othine — double strength — is guaranteed to remove these homely spots.

Simply get an ounce of othine—double strength—from your druggist, and apply a little of it night and morning and you should soon see that even the worst freckles have begun to disappear, while the lighter ones have vanished entirely. It is seldom that more than one ounce is needed to completely clear the skin and gain a beautiful clear complexion.

Be sure to ask for the double strength othine, as this is sold under guarantee of money back if it fails to remove freckles.—Adv.

Sublime Orders.

Colonel Cook was, as colonels go, not a bad old stick to have about a regiment, says London Ideas. Recently he had three men of his company in to help him remove the grand piano, and, as this gift of Aunt Eliza's was of hefty build, he signed a blank order that the men might obtain beer from the canteen; leaving the amount thereof for the warriors to fill in themselves.

Here was a dispute.

"Put down six pints," suggested Private Dumps.

"More like a barrel!" growled one of the others.

But at last the sergeant came along with the right idea. He filled the paper up thusly:

"Please fill these men with beer."

Between Friends.

Hallie was great friends with a neighbor boy named Bruce. They lived in the country and had a mile to walk to school, and always went and returned together. One day, after school, Hallie went home alone, Bruce having stopped at his own home just below our house. He was in a dishevelled condition, and on being questioned, confessed that he had been fighting, and that he had come out second best.

"But," said his mother, in a puzzled tone, "I thought Bruce was your friend."

"Yes, he is," replied Hallie, plaintively. "I don't know what he would have done to me if he hadn't been my friend."

Save the Babies

INFANT MORTALITY is something frightful. We can hardly realize that of all the children born in civilized countries, twenty-two per cent., or nearly one-quarter, die before they reach one year; thirty-seven per cent., or more than one-third, before they are five, and one-half before they are fifteen!

We do not hesitate to say that a timely use of Castoria would save many of these precious lives. Neither do we hesitate to say that many of these infantile deaths are occasioned by the use of narcotic preparations. Drops, tinctures and soothing syrups sold for children's complaints contain more or less opium or morphine. They are, in considerable quantities, deadly poisons. In any quantity, they stupefy, retard circulation and lead to congestions, sickness, death. There can be no danger in the use of Castoria if it bears the signature of Chas. H. Fletcher as it contains no opiates or narcotics of any kind.

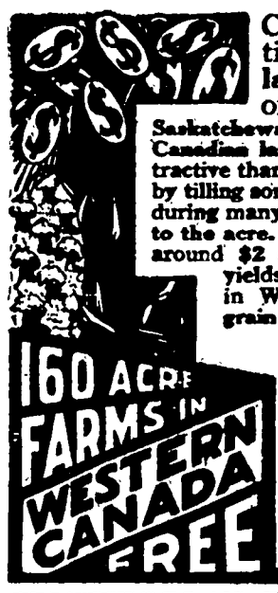
Raise High Priced Wheat on Fertile Canadian Soil



Canada extends to you a hearty invitation to settle on her FREE Homestead lands of 160 acres each or secure some of the low priced lands in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta. This year wheat is higher but Canadian land just as cheap, so the opportunity is more attractive than ever. Canada wants you to help feed the world by tilling some of her fertile soil—land similar to that which during many years has averaged 20 to 45 bushels of wheat to the acre. Think of the money you can make with wheat around $2 a bushel and land so easy to get. Wonderful yields also of Oats, Barley and Flax. Mixed farming in Western Canada is as profitable an industry as grain growing.

The Government this year is asking farmers to put increased acreage into grain. There is a great demand for farm labor to replace the many young men who have volunteered for service. The climate is healthful and agreeable, railway facilities excellent, good schools and churches convenient. Write for literature as to reduced railway rates to Supt. of Immigration, Ottawa, Can., or to

Canadian Government Agents

Recess Was Called.

A real estate agent was testifying in court recently in a case involving the exchange of a picture show for a farm. It was contended that the theater was not worth what it was represented, owing to its location. The attorney asked the witness to state what the surroundings of the theater were. "Next door to it was a shoe shining place," he answered, "then came a garage, and next was a saloon, and that's as far as I got." When the excitement subsided, the judge observed that that was a good place to stop, and the customary midsession recess was called.—Indianapolis News.

THE QUESTION OF LABOR

Probably the Most Serious Handicap to Put in Maximum Crops This Year is the Scarcity of Farm Labor.

[National Crop Improvement Service.]

Many a good crop will be ruined because farmers cannot get labor at the right time. There are two times of the year when more labor is absolutely necessary—at seed time and at harvest. While our farmers need men at other times of the year, these are the two crucial periods.

As it is to the interest of every person living in this county to produce a bumper crop this year, we must do all we can to help the farmer and perhaps the most important thing we can do, is to find him right help of the right class.

There are three classes of farm help—(1) The regular farm hands who are going to be rather scarce. (2) There are, however, a great many men who work in factories, in wholesale houses, drive teams and other occupations who could possibly be spared during the rush seasons. It is the duty of the commercial clubs and manufacturers to make a list of these men and offer them for detached service when urgently needed. There is a third class of labor which is very efficient and that is men of affairs who have been raised on farms who will volunteer to help the farmers out during the rush. This is the greatest work our business men can accept to show their patriotism at this time.

A Report on Rotation of Crops.

[National Crop Improvement Service.]

The tenth annual report of the North Dakota Demonstration Farms is ready for distribution. The crops are rotated on these farms. The results indicate that a rotation of crops pays. The average wheat yield was 29¾ bushels This wheat was in most cases followed by corn that had been manured Oats 58¼ bushels, barley 37¼, rye 21¼, alfalfa 2⅝ tons per acre. The rotation practiced on each farm is given in the report as well as a detailed account of just how each [illegible]

BARLEY NEXT TO CORN.

[National Crop Improvement Service.]

Barley has a feeding value next to corn. In [illegible] place it ahead of corn for [illegible] feed and at the present prices barley will make as much and more profit than wheat. The wheat crop has now gone to the [illegible] about [illegible] all of our acreage [illegible]

Barley is more profitable than oats. In fact, very few farmers make any [illegible] very few barley farmers [illegible] on barley. [illegible] the fascination of getting [illegible] for fancy barley, [illegible] per cent [illegible] which it [illegible] always makes money for the farmers While [illegible] one per cent of the grain [illegible] the loss of [illegible] value [illegible] because [illegible] goes back to dairy farmers in the form of dried grains and other by-products which for feed purposes is among the best available.

BARLEY YIELDS.

[National Crop Improvement Service.]

"Regarding the best yields of barley we will say that this is rather a difficult thing to give because the yield sometimes depends more upon the threshing record However, the average yield of pedigreed barley of members of the Wisconsin Experiment Association was in 1913, 31 bushels, 1914, 33.3 bushels, 1915, 37.5 bushels The yield for 1915 is the average from over 260 members reporting Some of the highest ones are as follows: 60, 57, 56, 55, 53 and 45 bushels

"It is impossible to state what has been the highest yield in Wisconsin, but I think some of these yields for last year, which was a very good barley season, are quite reasonable, but do not doubt though that there may be larger yields than these, but I have no knowledge of them."—J. J. Garland.

BARLEY NOT A HUMAN FOOD

As a Bread Cereal It Is Little Used. As An Animal Food It Is of Great Value.

[National Crop Improvement Service.]

For many centuries barley, the "corn" of holy writ, was used as a bread cereal, but it has practically gone out of use, except that Norway and Sweden use it in their peculiar bread disks, which are about the size and shape of a phonograph record.

Barley in itself does not make a good bread flour and could be utilized only by mixing it with wheat, something which the American miller considers desecration of his shrine. It has a peculiar flavor and is just as different from wheat bread, as either corn or rye.

But as a stock feed, it has many merits. As the kernels are too hard for some animals to relish, it may be crushed by passing it between rollers.

If finely ground, the gluten makes a sticky mass as soon as it is wet, and this peculiar property makes it difficult to make it into good bread. Its main use in the American kitchen has been to use it as pearled barley in soups. It is used some in breakfast food, through a malting process, but unless we as American people are on the verge of starvation, we will never use barley as a regular diet.

MONEY FOR FARMERS.

[National Crop Improvement Service.]

Many of our farmers will not have money enough to put in a maximum crop. This should not be the case. Of course, during this war excitement it is pretty hard to get anyone to do anything but run around in circles, but the greatest business problem we have is to finance our farmers so that they can get the maximum results for themselves and for our community We believe that if the banks will ask young farmers and tenants who have not established their credit, to make a statement regarding what they want to do with the money, that they will take very little risk in advancing whatever money any farmer will intelligently use this year.

It is true that the federal reserve banks will re-discount farmers' paper, but they do it entirely on the credit of the bank asking for the re-discount.

We believe that our business men would be very glad to pro-rate any loss that any bank would make in extending loans to any farmer who wants to increase the production of his farm even though his land may be mortgaged all that it can stand Especially in those counties where county agents can advise and O. K. the project, our bankers should have no hesitancy in furnishing what money may be required. There is very little risk because the world is short of food and everything will be high for this year and probably several years to come.

NEXT YEAR'S CROP

Let Us Begin Now to Organize for More Prosperity!

[National Crop Improvement Service.]

It is one of our American traits to speed up to high tension for a few days and then to relapse into our old "easy-going" habits If we can only learn by experience that we must organize against emergencies of all kinds for peace and war this excitement will not have been in vain It will do little good to shout at the farmer through a megaphone He knows his business and is doing just as good as he can under the [illegible] there is any [illegible] It is to improve circumstances Our prosperity depends upon the prosperity of the farmers and it is our duty to get him the best price possible consistent with [illegible] If we want the farmer to [illegible] we must do better by him However, he can find no complaint about the present prices nor for several years to come We may be too [illegible] corn and potatoes [illegible] into the ground We should organize for service in this county and get ready for early fall plowing after harvest.

THE BARLEY ACREAGE.

[National Crop Improvement Service.]

In 1915 [illegible] bushels [illegible] did not [illegible] rant a large increase in the acreage this year. Forty eight million bushels [illegible] As an economic problem it would seem that the high price of barley for malting would more than offset any feeding value, if any lost thereby.

The season for planting barley is one week late and therefore, barley can be put in to advantage up to the 10th of May and perhaps the 15th It is generally the best farm practice to put barley in just ahead of corn planting There is less labor in producing a field of barley than a field of corn and a great deal less risk. If you are short of labor on your farm it will pay you to put in some barley.

If you put in all of your crops and still have some land idle, both oats and barley can be sown for hay or green feed which will be immensely valuable this year.

STILL TIME TO SOW BARLEY.

[National Crop Improvement Service.]

The seeding time of barley should be done later than that of oats or spring wheat, as an early spring frost is more detrimental to young barley than to other small cereals The season is usually a week later. In Canada barley is sown up into June, but that is not advocated in this country. Still, the second or third week in May will probably be safe this year.

A drill or broadcast seeder is commonly used and the barley is sown at the rate of 1½ to 2 bushels to the acre. Where it is desirable to seed the land down to clover and timothy, 1 to 1½ bushels of seed barley as a nurse crop is sufficient.

TEST BARLEY.

[National Crop Improvement Service.]

All seed barley should be tested for vitality before sowing as the seed is quite frequently injured by heating in the stack or bin. If the seed is of low vitality and does not test 90 per cent it should be regarded as inferior and new seed should be purchased.

CORN CULTIVATION

In Periods of Drought Any Cultivated Crop Can Be Greatly Benefited by Continued Cultivation.

[National Crop Improvement Service.]

It is a debated question whether or not the mulch conserves moisture, but a shallow cultivation surely does kill the weeds and any farmer who is energetic enough to kill the weeds will get the best crops. There is still time to plant barley ahead of your corn. Don't allow an acre to lay vacant this year.

Morningside Addition

A number of the local businessmen recently formed a stock company and purchased a 20-acre tract of land from C. F. Busch, in the southeast part of town, which has been named Morningside addition. The engineer's survey and plat has been accepted by the city council and the streets are being opened and sidewalks laid. When completed, the new addition will contain close to three miles of sidewalk, which is being put in according to grade and of the best material possible Stiehl, Kuck & Co. are laying the sidewalk and Curtis Luick of Goodell is doing the grading for street work The plat is very nicely located and is high and level It will contain 36 lots and 5-acre tracts, and is bound to become one of the most popular building sites in our growing little town Already over fifteen different parties have signified their intention of purchasing lots in the new addition, but not any of them will be sold or priced until all work is completed, when they will be thrown on the market.

While it would be unreasonable to think this work would be done without some profit in sight, the main thought in view by those who are doing the promoting is to provide a good place for those desiring building sites, and lots will be priced reasonable, and there is not much question but that they will be readily sold, as there is a large demand for convenient and fairly priced building sites.

This new addition is something that Klemme has been sadly in need of for some time, and it will mean a greater and better Klemme Let's all boost the new addition and watch our own property advance in worth.

Wm. Sampson Obituary

William Sampson was born July 8, 1841, in the state of New York, and died July 6, 1917, at the home of his only living son, Leonard Sampson, near Klemme Born into a christian home, he received his life in early youth to the Master's service and united with the German Methodist Episcopal church, in which he remained a faithful member until his Lord called him home to the City of God

Leaving his home state, he came to Guttenburg, Iowa, and a few years later to Colesburg, Iowa. December 26, 1871 he was united in marriage to Emily Switchenburg. To this happy union eight children were born, of whom four are gone on before to meet the Father at his coming. In 1900 Mr Sampson came with his family to Klemme, where he has lived ever since. In 1914 his wife was taken from his side, and since that he has made his home with his children About four years ago he suffered a paralytic stroke and since that time he had been failing more or less The past winter he spent at the home of his son-in law, Rev. Fred Grieve, in Rudd, Iowa.

He leaves to mourn his departure his four living children, Leonard Sampson, Mrs. Wm. Gast, Mrs. Fred Grieve and Miss Emma Sampson, three brothers and and one sister, six grand children and many other relatives and friends

Johnston-Lau.

On Saturday morning, June 30th, at the home of the groom's sister, Mrs. Wes Schuldt, took place the marriage of Miss Lillian Johnston of Paxon, Illinois, to Walter Lau, Rev. Meyer officiating! Immediately after the wedding breakfast the happy young couple left for Minneapolis for a short honeymoon.

Both of the contracting parties are well known to the majority of our readers. The bride taught several successful terms of school in our rural districts, but for the past year she has been working in the Marshall Field & Co. store in Chicago. She is a very charming young lady and will be a worthy helpmeet for the young man she has honored with her hand. The groom has lived in this community and is one of our successful young business men, being associated with his father in the grain and live stock business, and we understand he will take over the sole management of the business, August 1st. He is building a fine new home in the north part of town, which they will occupy as soon as it is completed.

The Times takes great pleasure in joining with their numerous friends in wishing them a long, happy and prosperous wedded life.

Successful Chautauqua

Klemme's first chautauqua, which ended last Friday evening, was a success in every way, both from a financial standpoint and in the music furnished. The attendance every day was very good, with the exception of Thursday, when the heavy rain both afternoon and evening, kept the crowd away. It was proven that the people of this vicinity enjoy good entertainment when, Friday evening, the large tent was packed to overflowing for the closing number. There is not much doubt that another chautauqua will be held next season, as arrangements have already been commenced.

It would be a hard matter to state which were the best numbers on the program, or the most enjoyable, but the ones which appealed most to us and, we believe, to the large per cent of the audience, were the Arthur Gringle lectures on Sunday; The Venitians and Paul "Sunshine" Dietrick on Monday; the Edina Ladies' Band and Mr. Fred's evening lecture on Tuesday; the Cheney Concert Company on Thursday and Ploner's Alpine Yodlers on Friday. In fact, there was not really a weak number on the program. Klemme's first Chautauqua was sure a success from every point of view, and now let us all boost for a bigger and better Chautauqua in 1918.

Mrs. Johnson Obituary

Miss Ingrid Catherine Johnson was born in Sweden May 15, 1841, and died in Klemme July 9, 1917, at the age of 76 years, 1 month and 24 days. She was united in marriage to C. M. Johnson in the year of 1864. To this union were born four children, four of whom have to the Great Beyond, while Joe and Johnson of Klemme survive.

Mr. and Mrs. Johnson came to America in 1866 and settled in Illinois, where they lived until 1903, in which year they came to Iowa and located on a farm near Klemme. Later, they moved to Klemme, where they lived until death. Mr. Johnson preceded her to the grave January 3, 1916. She leaves to mourn their loss, besides these two sons, a number of grandchildren and friends.

"Grandma" Johnson, as she was familiarly known, never learned the English language, but lived a quiet home life which made an impression for good upon the lives of those who come in contact with her.

Funeral services were conducted by the writer, Wednesday afternoon, in the English M. E. church, after which the remains were laid to rest in Calvary cemetery to await the trumpet that shall call the dead to life again.

All join in sympathy with the bereft. J. J. Howdeshell.

Receives Commission.

It will be remembered by our readers that we stated that Dr. Thomas recently took the examination for army veterinarian. He received his commission last Friday and may be called into service at any time. Dr. Thomas has been here for the past two years and he and his family have made a number of friends, and he has enjoyed a large practice. All will regret their departure.

Flies are More Dangerous Than You Think

Flies breed so fast it is difficult to stamp them out. But, at least, we can keep them out of our houses.

And we ought to keep them out—not only for our comfort, but for our health. Many people don't realize what great disease-carriers flies are. They often come laden with disease germs directly to our food.

Screen the house and porches well and you prevent disease. Also you add to your comfort and peace of mind.

It does not cost much to screen a house. Let us screen your house.

The grille in the house of commons which impedes the view of occupants of the women's gallery, probably will be removed in the near future. The question was considered by members recently, one describing the grille as a discreditable and medieval anachronism. During the discussion it was stated that for many years women were allowed to go into the house and at times there was such throngs that they pressed into the seats occupied by members. On one occasion they were so interested in the debate that they took possession of several seats and it required two hours to remove them. This resulted in the exclusion of women for 50 years. The present grille was erected to prevent a repetition of such scenes and to prevent women from talking to members.

Progress in aviation in Japan has again been attended with tragedy. Recently two men lost their lives by the fall of a machine—one, Prof. Seitaro Tamai, of the Nippon flying school, and the other, Reizo Yukawa, a photographer on the staff of the Nichi-Nichi, who had been taken up as a passenger. Professor Tamai was a capable aviator and had made several previous flights yesterday near Tokio, with passengers, on one occasion having successfully looped the loop. But when he ascended with the photographer, connecting wires broke and the aeroplane crashed to the ground. The petroleum tank exploded, and the two men, already bady injured, were suffocated and charred in the flames.

Two young men at Belview, Ky., have designed and constructed a type of motor boat which they call a "hydroglide." The boat is built along the lines of a hydroplane. Unlike the hydroplane, however, it does not have wings. It rests on two wooden glides. The rear glide measures six feet square, and the front one, four by five feet. The hydroglide itself is 14 feet long and though possessing only an old automobile motor and steering wheel, makes a speed of 30 miles an hour The propeller, which pushes instead of pulls, makes 1,300 revolutions a minute.

In the supplementary budget estimate which is to be introduced in the coming speecial session of the diet is an item of 3,000,000 yen or $1,500,000 as expenditure for the establishment of an army arsenal in Korea. This is a new undertaking necessitated by the creation of two army divisions in Korea which were authorized in 1915 In case of emergency in the future, the Korean divisions and the garrisons in Manchuria will be enabled to have a quick supply of guns and munitions and other ordnance without relying upon supplies from Japan.

The Italian war department states that 240 miles of narrow gauge railway lines have been completed on the Italian army front The soldiers and sailors in Albania have laid 60 miles of narrow gauge lines, this being the first railway system in that country, and have further built 180 miles of macadam or dirt wagon roads within the past year These roads, running over mountains and through swamps, are also the first good roads known in this region since the days of the ancient Roman empire.

Gretna Green is a village of Dumfries, a border county of Scotland and near the border line between Scotland and England. Formerly a common resort of runaway couples from England, the practice was broken up by an act of 1856, which provides that no marriage should be valid in Scotland unless one of the parties had lived in Scotland for the 21 days next preceding the marriage, or had his or her usual residence there at the time.

LYON COUNTY COURT HOUSE IS DEDICATED

New $130,000 Structure Formally Opened — Chief Justice Gaynor Speaks.

Rock Rapids, Ia., July 7. — Lyon county's new $130,000 court house was dedicated this afternoon. Due to bad roads, the crowd from the country and the smaller towns was not large, but the townspeople turned out in good numbers.

Chief Justice Frank R. Gaynor, of the supreme court of Iowa, made the address of the day. Briefer talks were made by S. D. Rinliker, chairman of the exercises; T. E. Moen, chairman of the board of supervisors; E. C. Roach, County Attorney Simon Fisher, and Warren H. White, as representatives of the Lyon county bar. On behalf of the Daughters of the American Revolution, Mrs. M. A. Cox presented a large American flag to the county.

Originally it was planned to make dedication day a great county holiday, with a "free feed" as a central feature, but it was decided such a demonstration would be out of harmony with the times, with the country at war.

The new court house is an imposing structure, and the taxpayers are more than satisfied with it. They feel that they got something for every dollar that was put into it. Joseph Schwarz was the architect, and the A. M. Wold Construction company the contractor.

The old court house has been moved about four blocks away and is being transformed into an up-to-date hotel by Bradley & Olsen, who hope to have it ready for the county fair in August. They paid $1,000 for the building at auction.

WOMEN HOTEL GUESTS RESCUED BY FIREMEN

Scores Routed by Flames When Wales Hotel at Dubuque Burns.

Dubuque, Ia., July 7.—Fire of unknown origin totally destroyed the five-story building occupied by the Wales hotel here late Wednesday night doing a damage of over $125,000. Heroic work on the part of the firemen and the lack of even a breath of wind prevented countless other buildings in the immediate vicinity from burning. No injuries or fatalities have been reported. The loss is almost covered by insurance.

The flames were discovered shortly after 10 o'clock on the fifth floor, Scores of guests fled attired only in sleeping wear. Several ladies on the fourth floor were cut off from escape on all sides by the flames but were rescued from their perilous positions by firemen.

Flying embers and sparks caused several small conflagrations on adjoining roofs but these were quickly extinguished.

A feature of the night was the patriotism displayed by a member of the Governor's Greys Company A, I. N. G., who climbed up a fire escape on the burning building as high as the third floor where he cut loose a large American flag. The corner of which had just caught fire as he reached it.

The Wales hotel was an old landmark, it being Dubuque's pioneer big hotel. It was built in 1854 by John Holland, at that time the leading contractor west of the Mississippi river. The building has been used as a hotel continuously since its construction. Dennis McCarthy, the owner, intends to start work immediately on a new modern 12-story hotel.

FINE GROWING WEATHER BOON TO IOWA'S CROPS

Des Moines, Ia., July 7.—The weekly bulletin of the Iowa crop survey for the week ending July 3, says:

"Another week of favorable weather has been very beneficial to the corn crop and for farm work. While the temperature was not above the normal, there were several moderately warm days, and one excessively hot day, which started the corn to growing rapidly. Fine progress was made in cultivating, and most fields are clean. Considerable corn was planted on the late flooded bottom lands in the southern counties, and much of it is up. The crop, as a whole, is a week to 10 days later than usual, but is still very promising. All small grain is also late, and there will be very little, if any, winter wheat or rye harvested before the 10th, but the prospect for good yields is excellent. No haying has been done, but some clover is ready to cut in the southern counties. The crop, however, is poor on account of so much of it being winter killed. Early potatoes are yielding well and all garden truck is in excellent condition. Strawberries and cherries are being harvested with fair yields."

HAYNER TO ABANDON SUNDAY LAW PROGRAM

Attorney General Announces He Will Not Attempt to Enforce Closing.

Council Bluffs, Ia., July 5.—The effective "heckling" to which Attorney General Havner was subjected by the county attorneys of Iowa, when he appeared before them at their annual convention here on Tuesday, has borne fruit. The attorney general has announced that for the present at least no further attempt will be made to enforce the Iowa blue laws.

In a communication received here yesterday, the attorney general advises the county attorneys of Iowa that there will be no more interference by his office with the commercial business of the state, and that cigars and other stuff may be sold on Sunday hereafter in the good old way.

He says this decision was due to the fact that the county attorneys in their convention authorized President Swanson, of Council Bluffs, to appoint a committee of three members to go before the legislature at its next session and urge the repeal of the obnoxious laws. This, he asserts, is what he devoutly wishes to be brought about, although he failed to convey this impression in his talk to the Sunday school convention here a few days ago.

Also the names of those who purchased Liberty bonds or who are members of the Red Cross association will be seen on the bulletin, and as new members are gained their names will be placed with the rest

Omaha has welcomed Wilkerson, and many persons have expressed their willingness to aid the detective in every possible way in ferreting out the perpetrator of the awful Villisca crime. The majority of those attending the interrupted mass meeting in Red Oak are expected to be in Omaha when the meeting is called here.

West Liberty, Ia, July 5.—To Muscatine and Davenport, and there the trail ends, in an attempt to trace Otho Reeves, South Prairie farmer who disappeared from home several days ago. He recently completed a fine new home on his large farm, where a wife and seven children are awaiting word concerning him. It had four legs and in some respects resembled a baby alligator. The little animal put up a pretty game fight for a while, but it soon died when exposed to the air It will be sent to a large museum in New York city.

DES MOINES PLANS GENERAL CLEANUP

Will Put Curb on Vice While Troops Are Quartered There.

Des Moines, Ia., July 4.—At a meeting to be held today at the chamber of commerce plans will be started for making Des Moines a clean town during the coming encampment.

George A. Bellamy, of Cleveland Ohio, who represents the war department commission on training camp activities, is going to help organize local committees whose duty it shall be to see to it that proper amusement facilities are provided for the soldiers and that it is the right kind of amusement. Social regulations will also be considered and particular attention is to be paid to the vice problem, probably the biggest problem presenting itself in connection with the training camp.

At the meeting today committees of 18 will be appointed to look after the soldiers' activity outside the training camp proper. Each member of the committee of 18 will head a separate committee whose duty it shall be to look after one phase of the work. The chairman of the big committee will have complete charge of all activities and is expected to devote his entire time to the work.

What the local committees are expected to do is to cooperate with the city, county and state authorities in curbing vice and to obtain the cooperation of all local forces in seeing to it that proper safeguards are thrown around amusements and other enterprises during the period of the encampment.

It was pointed out that with nearly 40,000 men encamped at the 13th district concentration camp, there is a probability that on some evenings 25,000 of these men may be in Des Moines. The first problem is to keep that number of men, all restless and looking for a relief from the monotony of camp life, satisfied and on the move.

STRANGE BUG DESTROYS CORN CROP NEAR LOGAN

Logan, Ia., July 4.—D. H. Seabury, former resident of Logan, but now of near Pisgah, has lost 100 acres of excellent corn in the Soldier valley by the invasion of a new bug. It is light gray in color, from one-half to three-quarters of an inch long, and has a long snout, which with it drills into the corn stalk near the ground

The bugs are new to the farmers of western Iowa and they have thrown a real scare into the farmers as they made a clean sweep on the Seabury corn field, that is, they never left a stalk

Seabury collected and sent a number of the bugs to the state agricultural college at Ames, but thus far no word has been received from the state college in regard to name or method of extermination.

TWO YEAR SENTENCE IS REDUCED TO ONE MONTH

Cherokee, Ia., July 4.—A copy of the opinion filed in the case of State vs. Powers has been received by the attorneys, and from this it appears that the court considered that a sentence of two years in the penitentiary was too severe a punishment for a minor aged 18 years, to receive for the offense of carrying a concealed weapon, which was the only charge against him in the case appealed to the supreme court, and therefore while affirming the judgment of the court below, finding him guilty, the supreme court has reduced the punishment to 30 days in the county jail of Cherokee county.

SPIES WORK INSURANCE MEN REDFIELD SA

German Risk Firms Believed Have Given Information Sailing of Troops to France.

FEW KNEW SEA PL

Better American Spy Service Be Discussed Today—D Is Promised Man Who Told of Sailing.

New York, July 7.—Agents of the department of justice this afternoon arrested two Germans reputed to be a paymaster for German spy system in this country and the other alleged to have been formerly associated with Capt. Franz Von Papen, at one time military attache at the German embassy in Washington

Washington, D. C., July 7.—German insurance companies in the United States are responsible for the leak of news to the German military authorities, according to Secretary Baker. As long as they are permitted to operate here the government must keep a close watch of their operations. Quick death will be the portion of any German spy convicted of giving out information which leaked concerning the sailing of the American troop transports.

To Curb Insurance Companies.

There will be no dallying with those who endanger the lives of Americans by tipping off military information, and an example of summary punishment will be meted out, it is said.

Meanwhile the spy hunt continues. The president's cabinet may create a central intelligence bureau, coordinating the present lines at a meeting this afternoon, and something will be done to curb the insurance companies.

Everyone realizes that there was little secrecy surrounding the sailing of the transports, and usual ability to spy was not necessary All the spy had to do was to keep his eyes open, and if he had an advance code, he could forward the information to the countries.

Few Men Knew Plans.

"Mary has the measles" might mean to a code man that American transports have sailed Officials are convinced that Germany could not have had advance information of the ports or rendezvous somewhere in the Atlantic, as this was known only to three or four men in this country and Admiral Sims in England None of those who had the information are even under the slightest suspicion as all men of highest integrity and trust. Much is now assumed by the tipped off to the preparations and departure of the transports, sent out their submarines to sink them, but they probably were enabled to find transports.

To Revive Censorship

In insuring maratime risks insurance companies have gleaned a fund of information valuable to the enemy and if found to be misusing their position they will be speedily punished. It is possible that the efforts to pass a censorship bill may be renewed in congress to the government proper with the measures they have inaugurated.

CENSORSHIP TIGHTENED.

Washington, D. C., July 7—Censorship of outgoing cables undoubtedly will be made much more rigid to prevent spies from sending information to the enemy. Many officials believe information is reaching Germany in the form of commercial messages cabled from the United States to European neutral countries. Already, it is said, the government in cases that excite suspicion is changing the wording of messages.

TRADE BOARD BEGINS PRO

Federal Commission Seeks Cause of Production in Packing Industry and May Reduce Prices.

Washington, D. C., July 7.—While food control controversy rages in congress the federal trade commission is taking important action which promises to be of value in giving the public relief from extortionate prices for foodstuffs. Its investigation into the cost of food products has extended into an inquiry into the packing industry, a strong force of experts has gone to Chicago for this purpose.

The commission set out first to inquire into canned goods, then into preserved meats and now is going into the whole meat question. The objective is the cost of production.

Numerous other inquiries will be made. President Wilson has turned over to the commission $100,000 of the $100,000,000 emergency fund. This is additional to the amount allowed the commission by congress.

While the trade commission has been widely criticised for its inert course, its work now promises to be of great value in backing up the work Herbert Hoover is expected to do under the food control measure.

MEXICO TO BREAK WITH KAISER SOON

Pro-Ally Sentiment Spreads, Predictions of Action in 3 Days Being Made

El Paso, Tex. July 7—Since the pro-ally campaign in Mexico was first started by El Universal in Mexico city the sentiment favoring the allies has reached northern Mexico, and during the last 30 days a well defined movement favoring an open break with Germany and the alignment of Mexico on the side of the entente allies has developed

A reflection of this sentiment was seen recently in the statement by Gen Fracisco Gonzales, acting commander in chief of the northeastern military zone with headquarters in Chihuahua He was overcharged by the German firm of Ketelsen & Degetau for some padlocks. The manager was arrested and placed in the penitentiary The German consul made a demand for his release "in the name of the imperial German government and the kaiser," according to a Mexican official who was present at the time

"Tell the German consul he the imperial government and the kaiser may all go to hell," General Gonzales answered.

Prominent Mexicans men in close touch with the capital predict Mexico will declare war on Germany within 30 days.

The good effect of such a declaration upon the relations of Mexico and the United States, especially along the border, is pointed out

The anti-German movement is not unopposed in the north as the German residents of Chihuahua city Torreon and other places have been spending money lavishly entertaining officials, army officers and influential citizens. But with the usual German method they seem to have overplayed their hand and brought about a reaction by causing the naturally suspicious Mexicans to suspect they had an ulterior motive in their friendship.

Americans returning from Mexico city say 60 days will elapse before Mexico declares war against Germany.

KICK ON COAL PRICE PLOT AGAINST LANE?

Friends of Secretary See Efforts to Force Him Out of Cabinet.

Washington July 7—"A political drive to force Secretary Lane out of the cabinet and to arouse public distrust of the nation's men of business who have offered their services in mobilizing the industries" That is the judgment passed by friends of the secretary of the interior on Secretary of War Baker's letter to Director Gifford of the council of national defense which denounced the tentative scale of prices agreed on between the coal committee of the council and the coal operators last week

It can be stated with certainty that Mr Baker's letter and the accompanying announcement by Secretary Daniels that he was "going to get the cost" came as a complete surprise to Director Gifford that Secretary Lane had no intimation that the attack was forthcoming upon his participation in the agreement, which is the more pronounced because it fails to mention him by name and it is doubted whether President Wilson could have known about it or sanctioned it.

...RITISH TO HAVE LENS SOON, MAURICE BELIEVES

London, July 7—General Maurice referring to the fact that to the outside world it might appear that the British were making slow progress in their attack on Lens explained that situation thus

"Lens is an intricate mass of mines and buildings which render it a difficult business to carry out a direct infantry attack For this reason Field Marshal Haig has been taking advantage of the British superiority in artillery to prepare the way for infantry But we are now beginning to make the town a most uncomfortable place for the Germans, and I think we shall have them out soon."

CAPTURE 539 GUNS.

Since the beginning of the war the British have captured 117,776 prisoners, exclusive of natives taken prisoners in the African campaigns, many of whom have been released, said Major General Maurice. The British have lost to the enemy 51,088 men, including Indian and native troops.

The British have captured 539 guns during the war and lost 133 Of guns lost 37 were recaptured and of the 96 remaining in enemy hands, 84 were lost by the British on the west front early in the war

"The British have not lost a single gun on the west front since April, 1915," said the general

COAL PROBE ENDS SOON.

Washington, July 6.—Investigation of bituminous coal production costs, undertaken by the federal trade commission for the purpose of finding a price basis for government coal purchases, will be completed in about two weeks. The trade commission will turn over its figures to the government departments that use coal for such use as can be made of them.

Meanwhile the maximum prices of $3 a ton for coal at the mines set by operators at a recent conference here with government officials will stand in purchases by the general public

WEST CANADIANS TO MEET.

Ottawa, Ont., July 6.—A convention of western Canadian liberals has been called to meet in Winnipeg August 7 and 8. War has emphasized the problems of western Canada. The west complains that it is at a disadvantage in heavy railway rates; that it pays a large share of taxes imposed through the tariff while manufacturers of the east derive the benefit, that it is unable to rely upon free wheat being continued after the war and insuring it an open market in the United States.

MORE GOLD TO ALLIES.

Washington, D. C., July 6.—Additional loans of $100,000,000 to Great Britain and $60,000,000 to Italy have brought the total war loans of the United States to the allies to $1,203,000,000.

Great Britain has received $685,000,000; Italy, $160,000,000; France, $210,000,000; Belgium, $45,000,000, and Serbia, $3,000,000, and $100,000,000 has been placed to Russia's credit.

It is considered probable that Russia will ask a credit of approximately $400,000,000 in the near future.

NORTHCLIFFE'S RICH WAR EXPERIENCE EXPECTED TO GREATLY HELP AMERICA.

Lord Northcliffe.

The coming to America of Lord Northcliffe as head of the permanent British mission is expected to greatly benefit the United States. Outside of Lloyd George himself, Lord Northcliffe is undoubtedly the most powerful figure in England. His counsel will help this government avoid the mistakes which were so costly to England during the first years of the war.

Gentleman Mule's Love Song Now Sounds Like A Wrecked Phonograph

With the French Army Afield, (by mail) —Uncle Sam rendered France a great service in letting her have his mules—at a very good price—but France has returned the service 1,000 times by solving the secret of a brayless mule.

When the American pack mule arrived in France to "do his bit" he, of course, brought his bray with him. The mule was welcome but not the bray—well any unusual sound on a battlefield is undesirable It might tip off the Boche to a surprise attack.

In an effort to put an end to the nightly "love song" of the pack mule, the French military officers decided to separate the sexes.

This produced very marked results. Nevertheless there still remained certain mules who, either from force of habit or from conviction that both their love and their voice were so strong that their lady loves would hear them no matter how far away they might be, persisted in making the welkin ring with a gigantic bray just at the place and time when it would give the Boches the right cue for sending in a hail of shells, grenades and rifle fire.

The habits and temperment of the mule were then subjected to further study. It was found that a slight operation on the nostrils of a mule would render him as silent as a wrecked phonograph.

CANADA'S DRAFT BILL IS ADOPTED

Vote, After All Night Struggle, Brings Victory to Government by Unusual Margin.

Ottawa, Ont., July 7.—The Canadian house of commons early today adopted the resolution offered by Premier Borden passing to second reading the bill for compulsory military service.

Exciting scenes marked the taking of the vote which stood 118 for conscription and 55 against.

The vote gave the government about 20 more votes than it usually polls on important questions. This was the result of a considerable number of English speaking liberals breaking away from the leadership of Sir Wilfrid Laurier and joining with Premier Borden in support of conscription.

Before the bill was sanctioned Sir Wilfrid Laurier's proposal that the opinion of the people on conscription should be tested by a referendum was defeated by a majority of 49 The attendance of members of the house was the largest that had been seen in parliament for many years. The galleries were filled with spectators throughout the night and until the proceedings closed at sunrise.

A majority of the spectators were soldiers returned from Europe and women.

A resolution presented by the French nationalists from the province of Quebec that the conscription bill should be killed by the adoption of a six months' postponement was defeated by the large majority of 166. Only nine nationalist votes were cast for the resolution and both the government and the opposition to conscription voted against this proposal.

An amendment aimed to supply more adequate provision for dependents of men at the front was defeated, 115 to 55.

SHIPYARD STRIKE GROWS.

New York, July 6.—Extension of the shipyard strike today to include two more yards, brought the number of idle men up to 6,850 according to claims of union leaders.

NO MERCY FOR SLACKERS.

Freeport, Ill., July 6.—Opponents of the military service law who defied the federal registration law here last month were meted heavy punishment and scathing rebukes here by Judge Kenesaw Mountain Landis in United States district court. Of 121 men arrested in Rockford during the anti-draft disturbances there, 117 were sentenced to serve one year and a day in the Chicago house of correction, two escaped with 30-day sentences and another with 60 days, and another with 90 days.

DRAFT 2,000,000 IN FIRST CALL

Exemptions and Undesirables Will Then Be Weeded Out and 625,000 Men Taken for Service.

Washington, D. C., July 7.—The last preliminaries of the draft were completed today. From every section of the country, lists of registered men were reaching the provost marshal general's office. The posting of these lists caused a false report that the draft was already in progress. General Crowder is straining all resources of his organization to start making the draft next week. Local boards have been ordered to finish their work tomorrow.

Washington, D. C., July 7.—Secretary Baker and Provost Marshal General Crowder today were completing the final details of the method to be employed in selecting registrants for the new national army, but the date of the drawings has not yet been announced A complete organization of every local and district exemption board is necessary before the draft machinery can begin to operate. The drawings will be in Washington, and indications point to the use of numbers instead of names in making selections.

As there will be exemptions among the drafted before the first increment of 625,000 men can actually be assembled, necessarily more than that number of names will be drafted on the first operation. It is probable that as many as 1,000,000 or 2,000,000 names might be drawn and from them exemptions will be made. Then the first army of 625,000 men will be formed. Other troops will be drawn from the remainder until it is decided to raise another increment.

LABOR LEADERS ATTACK ATTITUDE OF GOMPERS

New York, July 6.—Twenty-five labor leaders, led by Jacob Panken, a socialist lawyer, organizers of the conference for the maintenance of workers' rights and standards, at a meeting yesterday prepared plans for fighting conscription and what they termed the "conservation attitude" of Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor.

QUIET NIGHT AT GLOBE.

Globe, Ariz., July 6.—The strike situation throughout the Globe-Miami district remains unchanged today.

Three troops of cavalry and one machine gun company have arrived in Globe to handle the strike situation.

DEATH OF FOREIGNER MAY REVIVE RIOTS

Sentry Kills East St. Louisan Who Failed to Heed Command to Halt.

East St. Louis, Ill., July 7.—Business men today were taking up in earnest the problem of the city's regeneration following the race riots of Monday and Tuesday, which cost upwards of 100 lives. The death of Peter Twardousky, laborer, father of five children, shot by a militiaman last night when he failed to answer a command to halt, has inflamed the foreigners here. Officials expressed a fear that the incident might lead to another outbreak.

The foreigner was shot as he walked along the track. The guard called three times to halt, but he kept on walking, and he was shot through the heart. Companions say that he could not understand English.

DIPLOMATS FEAR PILLAGE OF CITY

Fighting Begins Near Chinese Capital and Life of Monarchy Seems Likely to Be Short.

Endless choas seems to lie ahead in China. Dispatches indicated that the makeshift monarchy is tottering. President Li Yuan Hung, of the former republican regime has escaped his pursuers. The southern states are planning to secede from any Manchu reign, and an armed clash has occured.

So far the Manchu ruler has failed to force the resignation of President Li. General Chang Hsun, who is attempting to set himself up as dictator through the thin disguise of restoring the monarchy, is issuing one proclamation after another, and has attempted to set President Li up as a prince.

Peking, July 7.—(via Tien Tsin)—The position of General Chang Hsun, the leader of the royalist movement apparently is hopeless. It is feared that when this is realized his troops will loot Peking. The legations are prepared for all eventualities.

Tuan Chi Jui, commander in chief of the republican forces, has issued a lengthy manifesto denouncing Chang Hsun, saying that his action is villainous and declaring he is using the Manchus to further his own ambitions. Tuan Chi Jui promises generous treatment for the Manchus after the republic is restored.

Three thousand imperialist troops and 1,000 of Chang Hsun's soldiers have taken position astride of the Peking-Hankow railway four miles from this city, ready to oppose 10,000 troops commanded by Tsao Kun, who have reached a point 25 miles from Peking.

The diplomatic representatives have warned the government that the protocol of 1901 requires maintenance of and free passage on the Peking-Shanghai railway.

Peking, July 7.—Fighting began yesterday at Lang Fang, about 35 miles southeast of Peking, between the troops of General Chang Hsun, supporter of the monarchy, and the forces of the republicans.

The situation in the capital is becoming serious. Trains are filled with fleeing Chinese going to Tien Tsin. The hotels are full of foreigners. Small American and Japanese forces are endeavoring to come from Tien Tsin, but their arrival may be delayed by the fighting at Lang Fang, where 5,000 of the troops of General Chang Hsun are opposing an advance guard of 20,000 republicans.

50,000 MOVE ON CAPITAL.

Tien Tsin, July 7.—Fifty thousand soldiers of the republican forces are converging on Peking and the attempt to restore the Manchu dynasty appears to be at the point of failure. By midnight Tuan Chi-Jui, who has been appointed commander in chief of the punitive expedition, is expected to have 20,000 troops between Tien Tsin and Peking. Large forces are coming up from the south. Along the Hankow railway 1,000 soldiers are advancing. General Chang Hsun, the dictator who attempted to restore the monarchy, has only some 3,000 men.

Tuan Chi-Jui today addresses an ultimatum to Chang Hsun's troops, promising them more favorable treatment if they would lay down their arms. The northern military leaders do not expect fighting. They believe Chang Hsun will be deserted by his troops when the strength of the republican forces is realized. It is rumored that part of Chang Hsun's force already have deserted him. Fifteen provinces are supporting Tuan Shi-Jui.

GERMANS CRITICIZE GOOD CROPS REPORT

Copenhagen, July 6.—The German government's over optimistic report on the crop prospects, which were declared on June 25 to be "really brilliant" were sharply criticised yesterday by speakers in the reichstag ways and means committee. They accuse the government of giving the people a false view of the situation arousing unrealizable hopes. Herr Roelscke, president of the German farmers' association also said that the grain crop had suffered greatly because of drought. He expressed hope for the crop growing on heavy soils.

KICK TO POPE ABOUT LETTERS OF MERCIER

Copenhagen, July 6.—Dr. Alfred Zimmermann, secretary of foreign affairs announced to a committee of the Reichstag, according to news reaching here, that representations have been made to the vatican regarding the pastoral letter of Cardinal Mercer, wherein he spoke in forcible terms of Germany's crimes and outrages in Belgium. The letter was published in the French press and was the subject of angry comment by German newspapers.

THREE MONTHS' WAR BOOSTS U. S. LOSSES BY SUBS

Destruction of Shipping Since January 1 Is Nine Times Total of Preceding Two Years.

FEDERAL BUREAU GIVES AID

Insurance Rates Kept Down—No Life Insurance on Men Has So Far Been Paid, Report Shows.

Washington, D. C., July 7.—American shipping losses due to submarine activities in the first six months of 1917 amounted to nine times the total losses of the two years previous, Dr. William Delaney, chief of the United States insurance bureau, reported today. Since January 1, 1917, the bureau has insured 441,761,518 worth of American cargoes with a loss of $9,200,000. During the two years previous the bureau lost only $800,000 due to submarines.

The total salvage obtained from wrecked vessels amounted to $59,055.87 Millions of dollars have been saved to exporting firms every month by the bureau's insurance rates. On $623,964.598 worth of cargoes so far insured, the rate has been less than 2½ per cent. American insurance firms as a rule have been refusing to insure cargoes in the war zone, but where the risk has been taken a premium higher than 15 per cent has been demanded. Marine insurance rates in Great Britain vary between 8 and 15 per cent while the European rate is 8 to 12 per cent.

No Loss on Sailors.

The monthly average number of ships insured in the two years previous was 64 vessels. Number insured in June, 1917, was 1,405. Up to date the bureau has not lost a dollar on seaman and officers in the $50,000,000 insurance bill recently passed by congress.

It is estimated that before the termination of the war 250,000 sailors will be insured at an average of $1,500 per man. The cost of insuring these men is born by the owners of vessels upon which they navigate.

1,000 PERSONS TO HEAR WILKERSON

Will Journey From Villisca to Omaha to Hear Sleuth Expound His Murder Theories.

Omaha, Neb., July 7.—One thousand residents of Montgomery county, Iowa, will come to Omaha today to attend a mass meeting in Boyd theater, at which the blood-curdling Villisca ax murder case will be discussed.

A majority of those who will attend the meeting will travel 100 miles by motor car and special train.

It will be charged that free speech has been denied in Iowa under an injunction against J. N. Wilkerson, a detective, whose four years' investigation of the murders cast suspicion on a prominent state senator.

No precedent is known for such a gathering. The audience, composed of citizens of one state, will travel into another state to hear testimony against their neighbors because state officials are alleged to have lent their influence to proceedings which make free speech at home impossible.

Relatives to Attend.

On the stage of the Boyd theater Saturday afternoon will sit a group of Red Oak and Villisca citizens who are closely identified with the Villisca ax murder case.

One will be Joe Stillinger, father of two girls who were among the eight persons murdered at the home of Joseph Moore, June 9, 1912. Another will be Ross Moore, brother of Joseph Moore, who was killed with his wife and four children. Relatives of the Moore and Stillinger families will occupy seats on the stage.

It is expected that Joe Stillinger will preside. Attorney A. L. Sutton who represents Rev. Lyn G. J. Kelly, has been asked to preside, but declared it would be better if Stillinger would serve as chairman.

Invoked Thompson Law.

Attorney General Havner, of Iowa, invoked the Thompson law, which prohibits public meetings which may influence witnesses or jurors. In this instance it is contended that the Rev. Mr. Kelly is awaiting trial, under a grand jury indictment, on charge of being the ax murderer, and that the meeting would prejudice the case.

Detective J. N. Wilkerson, in the employ of Montgomery county citizens, will return to Omaha Friday morning. He will be the principal speaker Saturday afternoon. He attempted to speak at Red Oak last week, but was prevented by an injunction issued on the prayer of the attorney general. The citizens immediately raised a fund of $700 to defray the expenses of Wilkerson, rent of the Boyd theater and the special train.

Say Kelly Is Innocent.

In Montgomery county many substantial citizens do not believe that Rev. Mr. Kelly was in any way connected with the ax murders, and they further declare and will reiterate Saturday that Kelly is being made the scapegoat merely to get the case closed. They contend that an effort is being made to have Kelly adjudged insane and thus bolster up a theory that he was the ax murderer.

FIRE IN MOVIE FILM ON SHIP IN BORDEAUX

Bordeaux, July 6.—A fire broke out today among some moving picture films in the forward part of a steamship in dock. The flames badly damaged the upper structure of the ship and spread to the merchandise on the wharf. The conflagration was extinguished after considerable loss. An official inquiry has been opened.

Harold Heightler, Union County, Ohio.

Here's another way for the patriots to help overcome the wool situation. The wool shortage is really serious. The number of sheep in the U. S. has decreased while the population has increased. There are 12,000,000 less sheep than in 1900 and 20,000,000 increase in population.

"Bounty Jumpers."

The term "bounty jumper" was applied to a class of mercenary and worthless fellows during the Civil war who enlisted to get the bounty offered for recruits and then deserted and enlisted again for another bounty. The practice prevailed even during the revolutionary war, and at one time it was so prevalent that Washington issued an order against those who practiced it. They were warned by Washington that "whoever is convicted thereof and sentenced to die may consider his execution certain and inevitable." During the Civil war they were shot without mercy.

Light Colors the Best.

A recent investigation into the light-reflecting qualities of different-colored walls sheds some practical light on the question of what color the walls of living rooms should be tinted. The results of the research show that white walls reflect by far the most light; they throw back 66 per cent of the light that falls upon them. The other colors in order of their light-reflecting qualities are: Cream, rose, yellow, blue and green.

Musician's Irony.

Most great conductors leave a good legacy of stories, but the Richter anecdotage is curiously thin, and, even so, most of it depends on his imperfect knowledge of the English language. Certainly the best thing told of him is his remark during a rehearsal of the prelude to "Tristan." "Not passionate enough," he said; "you play too much like married men."—London Observer.

Plausible.

Someone asked a scientific gentleman attached to one of Uncle Sam's bureaus at Washington whether, in his opinion, any of the so-called inanimate things can feel pain. "There is nothing surer in the world," said he. "Have you never observed how a piano wails and groans when the average performer strikes it?"

How Dandelion Got Name.

Some of the names of flowers are so fanciful that it is hard to understand how they ever had birth in the mind of the people—for instance, the dandelion, which is so called from the French dents de lion, because the serrations of the leaves were supposed to resemble the teeth of the king of basts.

THE VALUE OF BARLEY.

[National Crop Improvement Service.]

In the United States and Canada, barley is used as a feed for farm animals, less than one-third being used for malting. A limited amount is used in the preparation of breakfast cereals and for pearled barley. "Our farmers are learning the value of barley as a part ration for dairy cattle and young stock and much more will be used as animal food in the future," says Professor R. A. Moore, the greatest barley breeder in the world.

In many states barley is quite generally grown as a hay and feed for horses. When used as a hay it is cut in the milk stage shortly after heading and cured like timothy and blue grass. We think that the hay phase of barley this year is very important because all acreage that has never been planted to other crops or that will need replanting for any reason, could be put into barley at a clear profit.

When the grain is used as a feed, it is either fed whole or the kernels crushed by passing between rollers. If finely ground the gluten therein makes a sticky mass as soon at it is brought in contact with moisture and it is not then readily masticated or digested. Only a limited amount of barley is exported from the United States and the export consists largely of a mixture of varieties as feed.

CORN ROOT WORM

200,000,000 Bu. Lost to Corn Crop Annually by This Pest.

[National Crop Improvement Service.]

The damage done to corn in the corn belt is estimated to be 200,000,000 bushels annually. In our mad scramble to get corn into the ground this year, we do not want to overlook this tremendous waste. Next to poor seed corn, the corn root worm is the greatest source of loss to corn. The remedy is the rotation of crops. Never grow more than two crops of corn consecutively on the same ground. If you had corn root worm bad last year and it is too late to put in anything else, you had better change to barley. Your seedsman can still furnish you with some excellent seed barley. If you do put in corn on that land, be careful to give your land more than a usual preparation. The time is late and we will have to bend every energy to plant our corn crop.

"Dry Farming" Needed Everywhere.

[National Crop Improvement Service.]

When we say "dry farming" we immediately turn to think of the western plains where the rainfall is deficient. We all admit that they should take unusual pains in conserving their moisture.

Well we ought to be ashamed of ourselves in the humid territory. When comes along a year like this, we think we are terribly abused and yet in any of this territory we have had more rain than Western Kansas and Nebraska gets any year.

Therefore, let us take dry farming methods to ourselves. Because in some years the rain comes when we want it, is no excuse for neglecting conservation of moisture.

What is this dry farming? Let us take it up with the clubs and make it an institute subject. Let us get our best farmers to agree to practice it. There is no drought year in the corn belt which does not have more moisture than necessary, if conserved, to raise a crop of corn.

POWER ENOUGH

Work Your Tractors Night and Day and Plow Every Acre.

[National Crop Improvement Service.]

Many farmers will not be able to put in their whole acreage on account of the lack of horses or other power. Every tractor in this county should work night and day as long as there remains an acre unplowed. There is still time to put in barley, and corn and potatoes, all three of which are worth almost their weight in gold. We appeal to every tractor owner to offer his services to any man who will not be able to get his soil prepared otherwise.

BARLEY VS. WHEAT.

[National Crop Improvement Service.]

Barley at 60c per bushel will profitably compete with wheat at $1.00. Were it not for the sustaining influence of the high prices for malting barley, it would compete with oats, but as it is the crop of barley for 1915 brought $122,500,000.00. The price of barley is now $1.20 to $1.50 per bushel, but taking $1.30 as a basis, the 1916 crop of 180,000,000 bushels, would bring $234,000,000.

Yields of 40 to 50 bushels of barley per acre are not uncommon and as just a feed value this means a handsome return to the grower. But in addition to this, there is always the incentive of raising a good crop of superior barley that can be sold for malting purposes, at advanced prices, and a good yield of malting barley will hold its own with any other crop.

MONEY IN BARLEY.

[National Crop Improvement Service.]

Those who have been disappointed in getting spring wheat seed are able to still make an even more profitable crop by putting in barley. The Wisconsin Experiment Station with headquarters at the University in charge of R. A. Moore, can furnish on telegram orders pedigreed barley by express in almost any quantities. The seedsmen are well supplied with this seed, and farmers who have otherwise idle land, can still make barley-raising a great success. Barley should be a leading crop wherever spring wheat can be grown and in many cases farther south where other crops may have to be plowed up.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies; and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven Catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only Constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.

"I shall try to prove that you are right," said Crochard, his eyes shining. "There is one more condition. In this affair, it may be necessary for me to call to my assistance certain persons for whom the police are looking. Should they be recognized while so engaged, no effort must be made to arrest them."

"I agree," said Lepine, instantly

Crochard leaned back in his chair with a sigh of satisfaction.

"I am ready to proceed," he said. "Let us for the time, forget our differences"

"I have already forgotten them," said Lepine.

Delcasse had listened to this interchange with smiling lips.

"Magnificent!" he cried. "I shall remember this scene all my life. And now to work!"

"First," said Lepine, "permit me to inquire of Inspector Pigot how it happened that neither he nor his men heard anything of these two strangers?"

Pigot flushed darkly and opened his lips to defend himself, but Crochard silenced him with a little gesture

"I can explain that," he said. "Pigot is not a genius, it is true, but neither is he quite a fool, and I should grieve to see him blamed for something not his fault. I was careful to warn my friend to repeat his story to no one That, I think, was the wisest course Those men must not know that we suspect them"

Delcasse nodded

"You are right," he agreed "Are you possessed of any further information?"

"I had only a few hours" Crochard apologised, "but I did what I could I learned that two men resembling these, and undoubtedly the same, had been staying since Friday at the Hotel du Nord. The proprietor of that house informed me that they left before daybreak this morning to walk to Frejus"

"Ah, then," began Delcasse

"But they did not go to Frejus," Crochard added They stopped at Salins, which they reached about 10 o'clock, boarded a small steam yacht which was waiting there, and at once put out to sea. I fear they are beyond our reach"

Delcasse stamped his foot

"What, then, is to be done?" he demanded

"It seems to me most important that we identify these men," said Crochard, "then we shall know where to look for them"

"Yes," agreed Delcasse, "but how are they to be identified?"

"There are, no doubt, in the files of your department, photographs of the most prominent German officers, both of army and navy. I believe these men to be officers—one, at least—the other may belong to the secret service. I would suggest that these photographs be brought to Toulon, and that it also be ascertained which officers are on leave of absence, or not with their commands Probably it will be necessary to search only among the general officers An affair so important would not be entrusted to a subordinate."

Delcasse made a quick note

"The photographs will be here tomorrow," he promised.

"I would further suggest that the inn keeper be strictly interrogated," Crochard went on "I ventured to ask him only a careless question or two, he does not know me, and I did not wish to arouse his suspicions."

Lepine arose.

"I will see him at once," he said.

Crochard rose also.

"And I will accompany you That is all the information I have at present, sir," he added to Delcasse.

"It is a great deal," said the minister quickly. "Just before you came, I was remarking to Lepine that what we needed in this affair was a man of genius. Well, I think that we have found him!"

Crochard flushed with pleasure.

"I thank you, sir," he said.

"And I thank you for coming to me," said Delcasse. "You are doing France a great service. I shall not forget it. Until morning, then."

Crochard bowed and left the room with the two detectives.

Delcasse sat for a moment deep in thought; then he summoned his secretary, gave the necessary order about the photographs and dictated a cipher telegram to the chief of his secret service at Berlin. That done, he bade his secretary good night, dismissed him and went to bed.

But not to sleep. Turning at full length upon his back, his arms above his head, he stared steadily up into the darkness until his brain, freed of all lesser problems, all vagrant thoughts, was concentrated upon the great problem which now confronted it:

How had the destruction of La Liberte been accomplished?

It was, of course, the work of Germany. Those two strangers, who spoke German in a moment of great excitement, who had arrived five minutes before the disaster, who had hastened away immediately afterwards, who had lied about their destination, and for whom a steam yacht had been waiting—all this, as Crochard said could have but one meaning.

And then Delcasse fairly bounded in the bed. Fool that he had been not to think of it! There was another proof! The telegram from the emperor!

He lay a moment trembling, then calmed himself by a mighty effort. How was it the emperor had learned so promptly of the disaster? There was only one possible answer. an emissary had hastened to flash the news to him—an emissary dressed, prepared, who needed to delay for no investigation, since the roar of the explosion told him everything—one of the men, perhaps, who had waited on the quay. And Delcasse biting his nails, his face wet with perspiration, pictured to himself the emperor also waiting, pacing restlessly back and forth, until the word should come! He gnashed his teeth with rage, this good Frenchman, and shook trembling fists up into the darkness. Ah, Germany should pay! Germany should pay!

But again he calmed himself, wiped his forehead, and composed himself for thought

How had La Liberte been destroyed? There was the question which must be answered, and at once

By a mine, set to explode at a certain hour? Delcasse shook his head. It was absurd to suppose that a mine could be planted in a harbor as strictly guarded and policed as that of Toulon. By a torpedo, then, which could be launched some distance away? But that was even more absurd. The launching of a torpedo required a complex mechanism; as well suppose that an enemy would be able to install a cannon on the docks unobserved. By a submarine? But La Liberte had lain at anchor in an enclosed basin: besides there were the outer basins, patrol boats, sentries, the constant coming and going of sailors and marines, of launches, of boats of all kinds. How could an enemey creep unobserved past all these?

True, the accident had occurred at dawn, when every one but the sentries was asleep. But even at that hour the harbor was strictly guarded. An enemy, to enter unseen, would have to be impalpable, invisible * * *

Besides, how could a mine or a torpedo or a submarine have caused the explosion of the magazines, one after the other, at regular intervals—"spaced," one of the officers had said, "like the reports of a heavy gun." First one had been fired, and then a second, and then a third; Delcasse, closing his eyes, had a vision of a ghostly figure stealing from one to another, torch in hand * * *

His mind roved back again over his talk with Lepine. Could it have been done by wireless? Not the ordinary wireless, but some subtle variant of ether waves, some new form of radio-activity, which in some way caused combusion? There was an enemy which could flit unseen from magazine to magazine, which no locks nor bars could guard against * * *

His heart faltered at the thought. The possessor of such a secret would have the world at his mercy. No ship would be safe, no fort, no artillery caisson. Armies and navies alike would melt before him, destroyed by the explosion of their own ammunition. Ah, if France possessed that secret * * *

He shook his head impatiently and turned on his side.

"I am dreaming foolish dreams," he told himself. "It is time to sleep."

CHAPTER IV.

THE ALLIES AT WORK.

It was nearly four o'clock when Crochard, Lepine and Pigot took their leave of M. Delcasse and made their way through the dark and silent streets in the direction of the Hotel du Nord. The people who had leaped from their beds at sunrise, wearied at last by the emotions of the day and dampened by the fine rain which had begun to fall, had gone to bed again. Only about the harbor were there any signs of life. There the searchlights of the battleships still played about the wreck, where squads of marines were searching for the bodies of their comrades.

The three men, their coats buttoned about them, their hats pulled down, hurried on in silence, each busy with his own thoughts Crochard and Lepine were planning the campaign; Pigot had not yet recovered from his confusion at the sight of these two working hand in hand.

Five minutes brought them to the door of the Hotel du Nord, and Lepine applied to it a vigorous fist. There was no response, and he pounded again. At last there came the sound of a window being raised, and a night capped head was thrust out from the upper story.

"Who is there?" asked a voice.

"Are you the proprietor?" demanded Lepine.

"Yes, sir."

"Then come down at once."

"But what is wrong, sir?" stammered Brisson, to whose frightened eyes those three dark figures huddled in his doorway appeared most sinister. "What is it you require?"

"No matter," said Lepine, sternly. "Come down at once and open the door."

The window was lowered and some minutes passed Had the three men at the door been able to see inside the house, they would have been amused at what occurred there, could anything have amused them at that moment. As it was, they merely stamped with impatience and crowded closer to the door, for the rain was falling more heavily.

Brisson retreated from the window, his fat countenance fallen into creases of dismay, and plunged back into his bedroom, where his wife, who had also been awakened by the knocking, was sitting up in bed.

"What is it, Brisson?" she asked

"There are three men below," gasped Aristide, fumbling for his trousers. "They command that I descend at once and admit them. There is something which tells me it is the police—the police at this hour!"

"The police?" and Madame Gabrielle cast a rapid mental glance over their affairs. "Well, admit them we have no reason to fear the police."

"There is that little matter of the wine from your nephew which did not pay the octroi," Brisson reminded her.

"Bah!" retorted Madame, who was by far the stronger spirit "it cannot be that! No one could suspect that; besides, even if they did, they would not come hammering here in the middle of the night. Descend at once and admit them. Assume a bold front, Brisson! Do not let them suspect that you have fear! Go at once Hasten! I will come as soon as I have found a petticoat."

Thus encouraged, Brisson descended and opened the door, holding a lighted candle above his head and presenting as bold a front as his not too courageous spirit could muster. The three men crowded past him, without waiting for an invitation or saying a word, and one of them took the door from his hand and closed and bolted it. The horrible thought flashed through Brisson's head that they were robbers, bandits, and he had opened his mouth to cry for help, when one of them, the little, lean, grey bearded one, with the fierce eyes, spoke.

"We belong to the police," he said. "We desire a few moment's conversation with you."

"Certainly, sir," stammered Brisson, thinking, as he met those eyes, that perhaps he would have preferred the bandits. "Come this way, if you please, sirs," and he led the way into his bureau.

He placed the candle on the table and dropped into a chair. His visitors remained standing, facing him. Brisson realized that for him to sit while they stood was anything but courteous, and he struggled to arise, but the strength seemed departed from his legs, and he sank helplessly back again.

"What is your name?" asked the little man, looking at him with those gimlet eyes.

"Aristide Brisson, sir."

"You have been long in this house?"

"For 20 years, sir. My record is of the best."

"We will investigate it," said Lepine curtly.

"Do so!" cried a voice behind them. "Nothing would please us better!" They turned to find Madame Brisson on the threshold, her eyes flashing, her bosom heaving, one plump hand hold together at the throat the garment which threatened every moment to disclose her still plumper shoulders. "We are honest people — our neighbors will speak a good word for us—all of them!"

"I do not doubt it, Madame," said Lepine, courteously, realizing that here he had to do with the head of the house. "Meanwhile we wish to make certain inquiries of you, which you need not hesitate to answer But I wish first to warn you that of these inquiries you must not breathe so much as a word to any one. Do you understand?"

"We understand, sir; you may rely upon us," said Madame Brisson, and sat down beside her husband.

"Our inquiry," pursued Lepine, "concerns the two gentleman who departed so early yesterday morning."

At the words, Brisson bounded in his chair, and the color swept back into his cheeks. He was himself again.

"So!" he cried, and suddenly found that he could stand erect, and did so "So! It is about those swine! I knew that all was not right, I knew that they were not as they pretended!"

"What was it they pretended?"

"That they were of America. But it did not deceive me—no, not for one instant. They had not the air of Americans. Besides, do Americans go tramping about the country with knapsacks on their backs? No, only Germans do that! To Gabrielle, as they departed, I said, 'Americans, no. Germans perhaps, or Austrians—but not Americans!'"

"Yes, gentlemen, those were his very words!" said Madame Brisson, with an emphatic nod

"And there is a final proof," went on Brisson, excitedly, "a proof conclusive. When I present my bill, the one who takes it grows quite red with anger. It was a most reasonable bill - 96 francs for three days, with many extras — a most reasonable bill, for Americans. It was then that I knew there was something wrong—that they were imposters who feared the police. It was only that which prevented a scene. 'Gabrielle,' I said, as they went away down the street, 'those men have something to conceal'"

"Yes, gentlemen," put in Gabrielle, "he said just that."

"There is even worse to come, sirs," and Brisson dropped his voice as one does in speaking of great horrors. "You will scarcely credit it, but, after having had us at their heels for three days, upstairs, downstairs, after compelling us to arise in the dark of night to prepare their breakfasts—this person handed me a note for 100 francs and said with a lordly air, 'You may keep the change.' The change—four francs! And yet from his manner you would have thought he was giving me a fortune!"

"Have you still that 100-franc note?" Lepine inquired.

"But certainly, sir," answered Madame Gabrielle, and, turning her back to the company, she stooped quickly and arose with the bill in her hand

Lepine took it and examined it carefully by the light of the candle. It was a new note, apparently fresh from the bank, and the prefect's eyes were shining with satisfaction when he raised his head.

"I shall have to retain this," he said. "One moment," he added, as Madame Brisson opened her lips to protest; "I shall, of course, give you another for it," and he drew out his purse, placed the new note carefully in a flapped compartment, selected another and handed it to the anxious lady, who received it with a sigh of relief. "And now!" went on Lepine, "please tell us all that you can remember about these men—every small detail."

Impertinent.

From the Baltimore American.

"My dear, the woman you sent me from the intelligence office was very impertinent What do you think she said when I asked her why she had left her last place?"

"What did she say?"

"She asked me why my last cook left here."

FT. LEAVENWORTH CALLED "THE OLD LADIES' HOME"

Leavenworth, Kan.—Wherever military men abide Leavenworth is known as "the motherinlaw of the army" because of the many Leavenworth women who have married officers, or soldiers, but now they are beginning to call it "the old ladies' home" because so many of these army wives are coming back to stay while their husbands are in France. The early arrivals got quarters at Fort Leavenworth, and the late arrivals are filling up the apartment houses and hotels in town.

Leavenworth girls always have had the pick of the army because of the schools at Fort Leavenworth. Young officers are sent to the schools at just about the time they have saved up enough money and reach the right age to marry Between the social affairs at the post and in town the young officers have plenty of opportunity to meet the young women, and as a result, Leavenworth probably has furnished more brides to the army than any other town in the country, and a reunion of almost any Leavenworth high school class in the last 20 years could be held at almost any army post in the country.

Now with their husbands being transferred from one point to another every few days, and preparing meantime to cross to France, these wives and their families are coming back to Leavenworth to be with their folks or live in the comfortable quarters at the fort, so that the children can go to school and the town is rapidly filling up with "war widows." Not all of them, however, are wives of officers. Several hundred retired non-commissioned officers live in Leavenworth, and many of them, men between 50 and 60 years of age, have been ordered back into active service, leaving their families here.

The Right Kind of Censorship.

From the Philadelphia Ledger.

How is information calculated to give "aid and comfort to the enemy" being conveyed to Germany from the United States? The newspapers are not at fault; they have scrupulously observed, almost without exception, the requests of the government It may be doubted if spies in the government departments have much to do with it. There is a much simpler explanation The mails and the cables to Europe are still uncensored on this side. That task is left to the British censorship. it is a task which none but ourselves can adequately perform. An interesting Washington dispatch in the New York Tribune points out why. In the first place, much mail for neutral countries does not pass through British hands. German sympathizers here are cut off from direct communication with Germany, but they can send any news they please through Mexico or Spain, for example In the second place, the British censorship cannot in many cases discover the true nature of messages which come from the United States Unless there is something plainly suspicious about them they get through The subtler forms of information can be detected only by American investigators.

If therefore, news regarding the movements of our warships and similar confidential matters is reaching German officials the explanation is sufficiently obvious Large numbers of Germans in this country are unwatched and unregistered, they have every means of knowing all that is going on No doubt the majority of them are perfectly loyal But this is no reason for giving them the opportunity to be disloyal if they desire. Those who have nothing to conceal cannot object to a censorship of their correspondence, since all citizens alike will have to submit to it. There is something distasteful, of course, in the idea that letters, sent out of the country must be opened and read But many things must be tolerated in war which would not be tolerated in peace We are courting disaster so long as we let those who would do us injury have a free hand.

From the Minneapolis Journal

The senior girls of Radcliffe college vamped the commencement this year by confessing in their artless way the kind of men they desired for husbands, provided they should decide to take on such encumbrances In the account that comes to hand, evidently considerably abridged, the girls seemed mostly of one mind They wished for a man, a real masculine man. Notice these demands

The right man "must be fond of thunder and lightning." Here the lady possibly a bit timid herself in the play of the powerful forces of nature desires to have her one who, like Ajax, defies such forces. It is the need of the mental "tower of strength" again.

A second Radcliffe senior affirms that hers "must know how to swear, but not do it" What the lady has in mind, evidently, is the opposite of the mollycoddle. She demands a vigorous temperament This husband, who hammers his thumb in place of the nail, must react with vigor, but not with open profanity Unfortunately, the lady does not define just the proper masculine reaction to this mischance

A third professes that she will be content with a husband who is "a cross between a caveman, a gypsy and an Irisher" Here we see the desire to depart from the conventional, to get away from the deadening effect of office routine on a man, to have and to hold a real man with the bark on. The demand is understandable enough, though rather difficult to fill It may be less difficult after the war, when the boys come back with the adventurous flavor about them.

On the whole, the demands on the male sex made by the Radcliffe girls are, simmered down, for real men. It is the same old demand and not unreasonable.

War and Fraud.

John Quincy Adams.

My own deliberate opinion is, that the more pure moral principle is carried into the policy and conduct of a government, the wiser and more profound will that policy be. * * * The path of virtue is, indeed, not always clear, and in the complication of human affairs, artifice and dissimulation itself must occasionally be practiced. The sternest moralists allow it in time of war, and there may perhaps be occasions when it is justifiable in contemplation of war, or defensively against deceptions of the same kind. But it may, I believe, be laid down as a universal maxim that fraud is never justifiable Where force would not be equally justifiable to effect the same object. Fraud is therefore, a weapon essentially belonging to the relations of war, and in them to be very sparingly resorted to; for every instance of it, even when justifiable, tends when discovered to impair the confidence of mankind in the sincerity and integrity of him who uses it.

War Profits.

Edward Hungerford, in Everybody's for July.

If I were to attempt a rough catalog of the classes and industries that in America have benefited most by the war, I should put at the head of the list the farmers and shipowners to whom it has brought universal prosperity; after them, the bankers who have financed the munition firms and invested in their securities, and whose gains have been, not absolutely, but relatively, very considerable; after them, the owners of the indispensable raw materials required in making shells, guns and rifles; after them, the makers of tools and machinery what were needed for the same purpose; after them, the manufacturers of the general articles of commerce demanded by the belligerents; after them, the firms that had already had experience in the munitions industry and that needed comparatively few additional facilities to enter it on a large scale; and after them, the firms to whom it was an entirely new venture.

People and Spuds.

First Lieutenant in British Royal Flying

From the Louisville Courier-Journal.

"We often compare people to potatoes, but now the comparison takes on an added significance."

Deceptive But Effective.

Tobias Knowal peeped through the window of his office, then tiptoed to his desk, put a flannel bandage around his neck, put his arm in a sling, ran his hands through his hair, and limped to the door.

"Mr. Knowal?" inquired the caller.

"Yes," groaned Knowal. "What can I do for you?"

"You appear to be far from well," said the caller.

"Appear to be?" exclaimed Knowal. "Do you think I'm doing this for fun? But what can I do for you?"

"Oh—er—I won't trouble you now," said the caller, hurriedly "Any time will do." And he departed

"It's some trouble," murmured Knowal, pulling off his bandages, "but it's really the quickest way to get rid of these life insurance agents. They one won't trouble me again anyhow."

Some Grievance!

The railroad official invited the stout citizen to communicate his troubles.

"I want you to give orders," demanded the visitor, "that the engine of the express which passes through Elm Grove at about 11:55 be restrained from blowing his whistle on Sunday mornings."

"Impossible!" exploded the official. "What prompts you to make such a ridiculous request?"

"Well, you see," explained the citizen in an undertone "our pastor preaches until he hears the whistle blow, and that confounded express was twenty minutes late last Sunday." —Lamb.

A Paternal Error.

The young man of age had divested his father and joined the colors preparatory to going to the border. After he had been in camp a month he got a day off to visit home.

"My son," the father greeted him sternly, "I didn't raise you to be a soldier."

The son gulped a great gulp.

"I know you didn't dad," he replied, "but if you could only see the way those officers have been mauling me to correct your mistake, you would kick yourself thoroughly, if you had the slightest filial regard."—Judge.

EARL'S DAUGHTER, EARL'S WIDOW AND AN EARL'S MOTHER

Lady Feversham.

The Countess of Feversham is the windo wof the second Earl of Feversham, who was killed in action on the French front last year. Before her marriage she was popular in society as Lady Marjorie Blanche Eva Greville, daughter of the Earl and Countess of Warwick. Her elder son, Charles Slingsby Duncombe, third Earl of Feversham, was born in November, 1906.

A Rich Man's Sons.

By ... [illegible]

Carnegie once expressed pity for millionaires' sons. He declared that their fond parents, who had traveled a hard, stormy road, were fearful lest a puff of cold wind touch the cheek of their precious offspring.

"I want my sons to know how to endure hardship," was the ... laid down by the brainy, capable mother of Cyrus H. McCormick, the present president of the International Harvester company, an organization whose parts and appliances and ramifications far transcend those of the more loudly advertised ... motor factory.

Let me relate how the boy Cyrus earned his first money. It illustrated the character of his upbringing. Twenty-two tons of coal had been dumped on the side of the McCormick home to be loaded into a wheelbarrow, trundled across the grounds, and emptied into the coal bin. The 12-year-old Cyrus volunteered to do the job if his mother would pay him the ... rate of 50 cents a ton allowed for this work. She readily consented, and for several days the schoolboy kept loading and pushing and emptying that wheelbarrow until the last pound of the 22 tons had been deposited in the cellar. His back was nearly broken and his hands were badly blistered but when the work was done he placed $11 in his bank and resolved to set about earning $100 as fast as he could.

There was a sad sequel. By doing many other jobs about the house and never missing an opportunity to earn a few cents or a few dollars, he accumulated in three years his $100 and deposited it in a shavings bank. He had attained his first financial ambition. By his own efforts he had become a capitalist. His achievement gave him intense satisfaction. One month later the bank failed!

Few sons have more worthily administered their heritage. Not only as a business man, as head of an enterprise that distributes its agricultural implements in every civilized country throughout the world has Cyrus H. McCormick amply fulfilled parental hopes, but he has attained equally noteworthy cussess as a public spirited citizen, as an employer considerate of his workers, as a helper of his fellowmen. Were all wealthy men of his type, millionaires would not be held in such suspicious regard by the people.

American Tells of Air Thrills.

Winning and holding the command of the air in modern warfare is very largely a matter of superiority in numbers of planes and pilots. A deficiency in numbers may be made up to a certain extent by a superiority in speed of machines or skill of the pilots. But the Germans and the allies watched each other very closely, and neither could develop any marked improvement in aircraft without the other soon copying it or improving upon it. So in the end it came back to a matter of numbers.

Up to March of 1915 the Germans were masters of the air. They held their advantage by superiority in numbers. The British were forced to build up their flying corps after the war begun. By March of 1916, the British planes and pilots began to arrive at the rate of from 30 to 40 a week, and those of us who had been at the front earlier found ourselves reinforced until we could turn the tables on the Germans. Soon we had two planes to their one.

The bombs are suspended from strings carried up and fastened over a hook beside the observer's seat in the plane. He releases them simply by unfastening the cord and allowing the bomb to fall.

It is not possible to secure any great accuracy in attempting to drop bombs on small objects. The aviator cannot, for instance, fly low or slow enough over a trench to enable the observer to drop a bomb into that narrow space except by purest accident. You can understand this if you will attempt to drop a marble into a cup while swinging full speed in a high swing. The greater speed and immensely greater height of the aeroplane add to the difficulties.

But dropping bombs on such a large objective as an aerodrome, a supply depot, or a field headquarters is a different matter. By releasing a good many bombs as accurately as possible, the chances are that some of them will find the mark. In one instance one of my comrades was able to drop several bombs on a Zeppelin hangar, causing its destruction.

While flying back of the German lines during a bombing raid, I came upon a long railroad train, apparently loaded with supplies or munitions. It was coming towards me, and, as it was not armed with anti-aircraft guns, I could go down very close. I swooped to within 400 feet and traveled the length of the train, the observer dropping the bombs as we went. With the entire length of the train to aim at we secured two hits. Shortly after the bombs hit the roofs of the freight cars, there came a great explosions, the cars bursting into flame, and the train stopped short.

On the Right Road.

From the Milwaukee Free Press.

They had lost their way in their new and expensive car.

"There's a sign dear," she said to her husband, who got out of the car and flashed his flashlight on the board.

"Are we on the right road?" she asked.

He read, "To the Poorhouse."

"Yes," he answered. "We're on the right road and we didn't know it."

MUST REGISTER SAME AS BEFORE THE WAR

London—Many Americans in London were surprised and disappointed when they learned that, when the United States entered the war, they were not automatically relieved of the necessity of observing the British police regulations affecting aliens. This is especially true of the Americans who have arrived here since the early part of 1916. These must report their movements to the authorities just as all other aliens, whether allies or neutrals, ae required to do.

There is a considerable amount of red tape involved in the police regulations and no sooner had the United States thrown in its lot on the side of the entente allies, than many Americans got the impression that they would be relieved of this war time necessity. When they found out that their status in this respect remained unchanged by the turn of events many of them appealed to the United States embassy and consulate for further information. They were told that there was no indication of any change.

Every American who has arrived here since the early months of 1916 must have an identity book. Besides name, nationality, date and a signed photograph, it must bear the signatures and guarantees of two British subjects, property owners who have, at the same time seen the holder of the book sign his name to it. Before the book is received a signed photograph must be left at the police station. In some instances two months elapses before the applicant is able to obtain his book.

When an American moves from one part of the city to another he must report to the police stations in both districts and have his book stamped by the aliens officer. Much the same procedure is required when he goes on a visit to another city. In every town where he stays over night he must report to the police, giving all particulars as to birth, nationality of self and parents, a description of physical features, etc. At the hotel at which he stays he must repeat all these same details on a large sheet of paper which he is required to sign again before he can leave the hotel.

In certain sections of England a new rule has just been put into effect which requires aliens to first present themselves at police headquarters before they will be given a room in a hotel. The police issue a permit entitling the holder to stay at the hotel.

A party of American business men from London were required to do this recently upon their arrival in Liverpool. Their train brought them into Liverpool around 3 a. m. They were tired and hungry and the trip to the police station consumed another hour ... went through with the red tape ... naturally ... [illegible] ... at this time is ... [illegible]

Discussing the races that are likely to be submerged or to persist, Professor Metcalf mentioned the American Indian and the aborigines of Australia as among the former, the negroes and the Jews are among the latter.

"If there is any race that seems sure to persist and form a great part of the ultimate race it is the Chinese," he continued. "Their great numbers, their remarkable ability to live upon a low economic plane and to thrive, their love of peace, their great stability of personal character, their fine intellectual abilities and their capacity for response to the highest moral conceptions all indicate that the race will persist and will form numerically at least a most important element in the ultimate race."

As to the probable contribution of the Chinese toward the type of civilization of the entire race he said it depended upon their ability as a race to "come back," as the athletes say, something that no race which has ever made a major contribution to human progress has yet been able to do. "It really seems as if she (China) might be the first of all people to show this miracle of regeneration," he said.

Peculiar Test.

From the Boston Herald.

A certain master carpenter had a peculiar test to which he subjected journeymen who applied to him for employment. Having satisfied himsel as to general suitability, he usually inquired: "What are your favorite tunes?" "What do you want to know for?" the astonished applicant would ask. "You whistle and sing at your work, I suppose? What tunes do you generally whistle or sing?" "Oh, the 'Old Hundredth' and 'Auld Lang Sayne,' and—" "That's enough!" the master would exclaim. "You won't do! Those tunes are too slow for me. Good day!" If, however, the applicant answered, "Oh, I generally whistle 'Yankee Doodle,' or something of that sort," the master would say at once, "I think you'll do. Take off your coat and get to work!"

Peace on Earth.

By David Jayne Hill in the June Century.

"But, to speak plainly, peace is not in itself a human ideal. As long as it leaves unsolved the problems of justice, it is not even a desirable aspiration. It may even be repugnant to the moral sentiments of an enlightened conscience. It is to be desired only when it is the concomitant of realized social good, for it is in no sense an end in itself. But the word is not to be set aside as representing a mere negation, as if it were simply the absence of strife. Peace on earth would mean the liberation of human faculties for the highest and noblest achievements of which human nature is capable. It would mean a splendid efforescence of art, literature, science, philosophy, and religion, in short, culture in its best sense, as the spontaneous unfolding of the powers of personality."

NEWEST BRIGADIER GENERAL HAS A NEW UNIFORM, NOW TABOO

Brig. Gen. R. E. L. Michie.

Brig. Gen. R. E. L. Then he went to Russia, where he is aide to Gen. Hugh L. Scott in the Root mission.

WELL TREATED BY SWISS

Berne, Switzerland (by mail)—Between 10,000 and 12,000 deserters from the armies of the entente allies and the central powers have fled to Switzerland since the beginning of the war, or have refused to leave the country at the conclusion of furloughs and thus are classed as deserters. The majority are said to be Italians.

The long list constitutes a not inconsiderable problem for the authorities. They enjoy the same rights as other foreigners who are here legitimately, yet cannot be drawn on in any way for taxes or state expenses. They pay no military tax of immunity, and not infrequently commit deeds that make it necessary to send them to jail —where their support naturally falls on the confederation.

As a problem they may be said to rank in vexatiousness with the innumerable and constant violations of neutrality which come to light almost daily, especially on the part of the French and the Germans.

The general staff of the army announces on an average a dozen aerial violations a week by aviators who "cut across lots" on the way to or from France or Germany, and who cross the little neck of Switzerland that juts up into both countries in the northwest corner of the country.

This little neck also is weekly the target for both French and German shells. The gunners, far behind the lines, get wrong ranges and "shoot up" Swiss territory before they can be told of their mistake.

Less often, but occasionally prisoners of war attempt to escape either from Germany or France, and are shot and killed after they have reached Swiss territory and menace those on this side.

It is generally the case that fugitives who do manage to reach this side, regardless of where they come from, are royally and handsomely treated. Recently four Russians escaped from Germany, swam the Rhine, and landed on Swiss soil. They were met by a veritable reception committee on this side, were given a meal that satisfied even their enormous, starved appetites, and were generally feted before being escorted to an internment camp, where they will spend the rest of the war.

Foreigners Like Uncle Sam's Schools.

Eleanor Booth Simmons, World Outlook for July.

In foreign countries everywhere, the committee on friendly relations finds, there is a growing appreciation of educational opportunities under Uncle Sam. Russia and Belgium, Poland and the ... of contact with us. South American educationalists, especially, are anxious to have their young men and women imbibe the spirit of our institutions, for the great lack of Latin-American students, especially the women, is their want of esprit de corps. There is no real student life in the colleges down there. Fancy the fun they lose, and what a dreary thing college life must be for them!

Chinese fathers and mothers of the upper classes are sending their children in increasing numbers to study in the United States, and it happens that not a few of the students from that land now are non-Christian, coming from families that have not embraced the faith of the missionaries. But the committee on friendly relations makes no distinctions. Christian or non-Christian, any lonely foreign student who needs aid gets it.

Some of the Chinese students are sent by missionaries—waifs, some of them, rescued from opium ridden homes in their childhood. About 400 Chinese have been sent here by the American indemnity fund, the money paid by China to this government after the Boxer uprising, and devoted to the education of deserving youths of that country. All classes come through that fund, for competitive examinations are held, and they are free to all, the best ones winning. There are far fewer women coming to America to study than men. In fact, out of all the 6,000 foreign students there are only 200 women—100 Chinese, 50 Japanese, a few Koreans and Armenians and Africans. One African princess, if you please, at the University of Wisconsin; a handsome girl, whose jungle antecedents one would never guess from her manners, for her poise is perfect.

Tin Makers Work Overtime.

Atlantic City, N. J.—The demand of 10,000 sheet iron and tin plate workers of the east and middle west for a substantial wage increase to meet the rising cost of living, will be communicated to the Western Sheet and Tin Plate Manufacturers' association soon. Representatives of the employers and employes gathered here recently, but specific demands were not communicated. Seventeen plants are working 24 hours a day with three shifts, the manufacturers declared, in an effort to supply the government's needs. Whether they will work seven days a week is another matter for discussion. The workmen are set against it, and the opinion is that the government does not wish it.

Some apprehension seemed evident among the manufacturers' representatives lest the government take over their plants, and it was indicated that some of the trade had already been instructed to devote itself entirely to the government. The balance are doing everything possible to expedite government orders. The need for more satisfactory arrangement of transportation facilities was indicated.

How He Felt.

After the battle of Mons an officer congratulated an Irishman on his conspicuous bravery under fire.

"Well, Pat," he said, "how did you feel during the engagement?"

"Feel, captain," answered Pat. "I felt as if ivvery hair on me head was a band of music, and they wer all playing 'Home, Sweet Home.'"

ENGLAND ARRANGES WINTER COAL SUPPLY

Controller Takes No Chances on Fuel Shortage and Traces Shipment Routes.

London (by mail)—Having passed through the third winter of the war without a serious coal shortage, England is ... preparing for the coal season of 1917-18.

The coal controller is planning an elaborate organization for dealing with the country's supply, the question of labor and of public economy.

More than 250,000 miners enlisted in the army during the first two years and a half. Approximately 1,000,000 were engaged before the war. As a result the mining industry was seriously weakened, and the output of coal greatly diminished.

National service will probably be extended to cover this field of operations during the summer and fall, but the controller is going much deeper into the question of supply and demand. He is tracing the consignments of coal from the pits to their consumers, ascertaining how far the fuel has to be transported and how it is taken from the various collieries to the various consumers.

Further public economy in the matter of fuel will be strongly urged on the public before next winter the controller announced, and it may even be necessary to introduce compulsory measures.

Why France Needs Our Aid.

Written by J. Lothrop Stoddard, author of "Present Day Europe."

The spirit of France is magnificent, incomparable. What is lacking is men. It is no exaggeration to say that France is bleeding to death. The tragic effects of the national hemorrhage are becoming increasingly patent with every passing day. Since the beginning of the war France must have lost over 3,000,000 men. There cannot be more than 1,500,000 Frenchmen left who are fit to bear arms, and of these 250,000 are in munition factories and other indispensable civilian posts, while fully 150,000 are at Saloniki or in the colonies. This leaves little more than 1,000,000 soldiers for the battle lines in northeastern France. Of course every year brings its fresh crop of youth, but the annual French military class is less than 300,000 and the class of 1918 is already with the colors. France has done her very best. She has given her heart's blood to the cause of liberty. She will be able to hold a diminishing portion of the western front —but that is all.

The internal condition of France is, as might be expected, critical. The complete absence of able-bodied men has profoundly disorganized both her industrial and her agricultural life. True, the women of France are showing a spirit fully the equal of their men's, but all the spirit in the world will not make up for inferior strength and relative lack of staying power in hard manual labor. The fields of France are therefore inefficiently filled, while many lines of industry are hopelessly handicapped.

In fact, French industry was dealt a deadly blow at the very start of the war. The majority of France's coal and iron mines and the chief industrial centers lie in the east and north, and most of these therefore fell a prey to the German invader. Hence France has been compelled to import most of its iron and coal—a herculean task, especially now that water transportation is becoming such a difficult problem owing to the German U-boats' frightful depletion of the shipping of the world.

Thus France struggles heroically on her manhood drained away to the battle lines, behind a land of old men, children and women in mourning, toiling heroically at tasks beyond their strength. And with all this, scarcely a murmur! Here and there a few faint hearts or cosmopolitan socialists may murmur hints of a compromise peace, but such whispers are drowned in the stern cry: "Jusqu'au bout"—"To the end!"

The Happiest Life.

Thomas Hill.

If ever anything has been made certain through human experience, through the labor of men's thought, and through revelations from on high, it is certain that a spiritual and holy life, of conscious communion with our heavenly Father is, beyond all comparison, the happiest and most blessed life. Nothing which the senses can give of pleasure, none of the higher enjoyments of literature and art, neither the happiness of discovering truth nor the joys of friendship, not even the sacred glow of love, can equal the blessedness of that man who has a perfect trust in God, and who walks constantly conscious of His presence and His love.

His Golden Wedding.

Said a young sub, just arrived in the trenches, to one who, despite his spick and span appearance, had been out since the beginning:

"Is this your baptism of fire?"

The old timer glanced scornfully at the newcomer.

"Baptism be hanged!" he said. "This is my blooming golden wedding!"

COUNT HERTLING TO SUCCEED HOLLWEG?

Count Hertling.

According to a Reuter's dispatch from Amsterdam, Chancellor von Bethmann-Hollweg, official spokesman for the kaiser, is to resign and will be succeeded by Count Hertling, present premier of Bavaria. Although Hollweg has displeased many Germans who want him to state Germany's terms of peace, he is known to be satisfactory to the kaiser. Hence the Amsterdam dispatch is taken with a grain or salt.

ENEMIES COME WITH SUCCESS

One Will Not Seem Right to Any If He Does not Seem Wrong to Many, Declares Writer.

You don't make a real success without making real enemies. You cannot hold a strong position without strong opposition. You won't seem right to any if you don't seem wrong to many, says the Labor Chronicle.

A useful life can't be entirely peaceful and carefree.

You must do your duty as you see it.

Every earnest man in every generation has paid the price of individuality. You can't dodge.

The greater you are the greater the penalty of your progress. The farther you go, the wider your range, the more you increase the points of contact with which you must reckon, and, therefore, you multiply your battles against misconception and slander and envy and malice.

An All-Around Surprise.

When the first shipment of frozen eggs had arrived, their extreme hardness astonished the brokers, and a gentleman calling at a broker's office was amazed to see him taking aim at the wall with an egg.

"What the dickens are you doing?" he asked.

But the man let drive, the only result being a slight dent in the wall.

The thing being explained to him, he took a couple of eggs and put them in his trousers pocket, intending to startle his wife with them. Arriving home, he waited till the family were seated at dinner and then banged one of the eggs at the new wallpaper.

But the smile quickly faded from his face. The egg had thawed.

Local Color in Monkey Game.

Marian's mother frequently played games with her while doing the morning's tasks, thus amusing the little one, without interrupting her own work. One morning after a visit to the zoo, Marian asked to play "monkey," and her mother laughingly answered, "All right, I'll be the monkey while I dust. Now what shall I do?"

"Oh, no, I'll be the monkey," said Marian, "and you has to go buy peanuts to feed me first."

Distinction.

"Is that reckless orator an agitator?"

"No. He's merely an irritator."—Washington Evening Star.

When love fails a girl she begins to boast of her indifference for the other sex.

"Draw" Shots in Golf.

The flights of golf balls and base balls in the air are similar to the trajectories of billiard balls on felt cloth and governed by the same laws. A blow with a brassie on the under side of a golf ball is precisely the same as a draw shot in billiards. The polished ivory needs the rough surface of the felt to produce resistance, and the tenuous air needs the corrugated surface of the golf ball for the same purpose.

March and Macaroons.

It may not be generally known that the month of March has a cake dedicated to its honor. Macaroons used to be called March-panes, from the medieval Latin, Martispanés, "bread of March." Some say the cakes were named after Marcus Apicius, the famous epicure; by another authority the cakes were made by the priests of Rome and served to the god Mars The recipe for the making of macaroons is very old.

Be Good to Her.

When we see a woman trying to buy a newspaper on a cold day, with all the apparently necessary maneuvers involved in getting a penny out of the small pocketbook in the deep recesses of her handbag we feel that she ought to have the vote or a mother's pension or whatever else she wants at the moment, so as to make up to her in some measure for the accident of sex. —Ohio State Journal.

World's Thickest Tree.

It is said the largest tree known, in thickness is a partly buried chestnut in Sicily which is 60 feet across. Mexican cypress and the oriental plane have reached 40 feet This puts the California big tree and the baobab in the second but the big tree is of greater height combined height and girth and the baobab is thickest in relation to height.

Wishes That Come True.

Good wishes have a way of realizing themselves. They have a potency almost magical, and the girl who is always wishing the best for other friends finds her hopes realized for herself, as though kindly wishes were a sort of gracious boomerang, coming back to the heart that sent it out Just wishing others joy, if the wish is from the heart, helps to add something to the happiness of the world

Value of Reading.

Read! I cannot too strongly recommend good reading. Six hours each week of serious reading is not much, but it may mean the difference between a $20,000-a-year executive and a $25 clerk. Read! Learn to think with—and against the deep thinkers of the world.—William Maxwell in Collier's.

No Joke.

We imagine that the women always fall for a line of hot-air talk. But just watch how any man under ninety-five will swell with pride when a girl tells him that he is a regular devil.—Milwaukee Sentinel.

Unique Popularity.

"A man dat minds his own business," said Uncle Eben, "is so unusual dat he's liable to find mo' people buttin' in on him dan a regular mixer."—Washington Star.

Heaviest Taxes.

"The taxes are indeed very heavy, and if those laid on by the government were the only ones we had to pay we might more easily discharge them; but we have many others and much more grievous to some of us. We are taxed twice as much by our idleness, three times as much by our pride and four times as much by our folly."—Franklin.

Duration of Human Life.

The average duration of human life is about thirty-three years. One-quarter of the people of the earth die before the age of six; one-half before the age of sixteen, and only one of every 100 lives to the age of sixty-five. The average age, however, is slowly increasing, probably owing to better sanitary conditions, and greater medical skill.

Talent and Work.

A talent does not relieve us from the necessity of working. It only shows us the line in which we can work most effectively. The girl who thinks that because she has a natural taste for music, she can dispense with the practice of scales, will find herself worse off than another who owns that she has no talent, but is ready to plod.

Worldly Anxiety.

A little girl of Maida Vale was asking questions in regard to her father's brothers and sisters. She elicited the circumstance that one of them went back to heaven soon after he was born. "Hard luck!" she remarked. "Very hard luck, indeed. I hope," she went on, earnestly, "I do hope grandpa got his money back!"—Lloyd's News.

Matches of Hemp.

In the use of early firearms a match consisted of a cord of hemp or similar material treated with nitre so that it continued to smolder after it had been ignited. The match was attached to the cock of the musket and brought down by the action of the trigger on the powder priming.

How Moving Signs Work.

In a general way the mechanism of a moving electric sign is like the old-time music box drum, filled with pins. As the drum revolves the pins make the contacts [illegible] and the pulsations [illegible] light, bird effects and designs without limit are produced

Modernized Education

Fond Papa— Well, son, what did you learn in school today? Son—"Aw, not much, dad. We hadda couple of two-reelers in history, a three-reel travelogue in geography and a split-reel nature study. They used to give a Wild West pitcher once in a while, but they don't do it no more."—Widow.

What We Eat.

The people of the United States consume fully twice as much meat per capita as do the people of Europe. Dried beans, peas, and lentils may replace meat in the diet to a large extent, to the advantage of outdoor workers especially.

Past Tense.

The original forests of the United States were larger in extent, greater in quantity of standing timber and more diversified in useful tree species than those of any other region on earth.—New York Telegram.

Getting an Early Start.

"Why won't you marry me?" "Because I don't love you." "Why need that matter? We'd simply have a five-year start on half the people in our set."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Suicides.

Records are said to show that the tendency to suicide is more prevalent among the educated and wealthy than among the poorer and middle classes.

AVERY CENTER

Bud Brugman and Mr. Nelson from Belmond visited relatives and friends in this vicinity Sunday.

Mrs. A. Avery from Goodell, who has been visiting at the Rhodes home, returned home Friday.

Mable Wilkins spent a few days last week at the Brugman home in Belmond.

Len Sherwood and family attended chautauqua at Garner Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. Toney Knipp visited at the Brugman and Wilkins homes Sunday.

FAREWELL

On Wednesday of last week we closed a deal with R. A. Jorgenson of Garner, whereby he became the owner of the Klemme Times, it's good will and all equipment, including building. The transaction was just as much of a surprise to us as it was to our friends and patrons when it became street gossip, as less than a week before we had no intentions of selling to anyone.

You will find our successor to be a most worthy young man and will without a doubt give you one of the best papers ever published in Klemme. He is capable, sincere in his work and a hustler, and the citizens of this vicinity will always find him boosting for the better things of the community. He has had considerable experience, having worked in the Democrat office in Garner for a number of years and thoroughly understands the printing business.

We wish to add a word of thanks to our patrons for their liberal patronage during our stay among you and hope that you will see fit to be even more liberal with our successor. It sure takes real money to publish a newspaper with the present high prices and the rates now charged for advertising, while they may seem high, should be raised in order to turn a conservative profit, so do not kick if "Jurgy" attempts to make a "raise" a little later.

During our four years in Klemme we know that we have made a few enemies and we also hope a few friends, and now that the parting will soon arrive, we wish them both good luck and much joy in the future.

Just what we will do in the future we do not know, as we sold out rather unexpectedly, but have our application in for the Officers' Reserve, and if we are lucky enough to receive an appointment may enter army life before long. We will always have a warm spot in our heart for the citizens of Klemme and it is with regret we leave. Again thanking you for past favors, I remain,

Very truly,
M M Magner

The Failure of Socialism

J G Phelps Stokes and his wife, Rose Pastor Stokes long prominet in the socialistic party of the United States have united in a resignation from the society. They say that they have lost faith in the party as an effective instrument for advancing the socialist cause." They might have added that they have lost faith in the party being able to do anything for the permanent good of society or for the world. Socialism is good enough as a dream an ideal but it has never been able to show any concrete results. Very few of its professed believers really know what it stands for or what they are aiming at. They [illegible]

In the present world crisis, when the struggle is between democracy and autocracy—and there is no other reason or issue in this war—the socialists of all the world have failed miserably. Mr. Stokes' statement says that democracy is the essence of socialism but yet the socialists seem to have leaned more toward the autocracy of Prussianism than to democracy. This shows that the leaders have had no clear ideas, or else that they are subject to influences that the kaiser and his cliques have been able to exert.

Good and Bad.

There is a good impulse in the meanest and a mean impulse in the best.

ANNOUNCEMENT

We wish to announce to the people of Klemme and vicinity that we have purchased the Klemme Times, including the building and complete plant.

We will try to give Klemme a real live newspaper, one that will be a booster and a credit to Klemme. In order to get out a good paper we must have the co-operation of the citizens and business men of the community; bring in your news, business men bring in your ads and job work, we will try to give our customers a square deal.

We have had several years' experience in newspaper work and we will endeavor to give the people of Klemme the benefit of our experience by getting out a good paper.

We want to get acquainted, so feel at liberty to call on us at any time. We will be glad to meet you and discuss any matter that you think can improve our paper.

We will add that we have had training in band work and we gladly offer our services to the Klemme Band. A good band is a good advertisement for the town; we are here to boost Klemme.

We do not know what Mr. Magner intends to do in the future, but we wish him the best of success in whatever he undertakes. "Mike" is a prince of a fellow and we know the people of Klemme will miss him. So everybody, hats off to "Mike" and may success be his!

Yours for a better paper,

Is Helping Zinn To Get A Transfer

U. S. Senator Chas. E. Townsend Active In Behalf of American Flyer

Dr. Zinn handed us an article from the Battle Creek Moon-Journal regarding his nephew, Frederick W. Zinn, who is a flyer in the French Army and who American authorities are seeking to transfer to the American forces. A part of the article as we read it:

"Hon. Charles E. Townsend of Jackson, U. S. Senator from Michigan, is doing his best to help Frederick W. Zinn, Battle Creek aviator, now in France, to get a transfer from the French to the American sky forces. In this connection Mr. Townsend has received considerable correspondence from Mr. Zinn, and as not all of this was marked "confidential," he releases the following letter for the Moon-Journal to print, since Battle Creek is so vitally interested in this young man."

The letter as it appears in the Moon-Journal is too long for us to publish this week so we give the substance of it. Zinn goes on to tell about army life, its thrills and pleasures as well. He tells us that America entering the war will decide the outcome, which he outlines in two parts, either it will come as a complete victory for the allies, or it will come out a draw, in which case nothing will have been accomplished. He says the French need men to fill out the sectors of the trenches. These side trenches have to be filled even though there is no fighting done either on the Allies side or the German side on these sectors, but they require men, and men with a very little training are capable of holding these trenches. He points out that the Americans would get the training of actual warfare by holding these sectors. Zinn points out that these side trenches have not been moved a foot on either the German or the French side, and that they are in the same condition that they were two years ago, except they have been made more comfortable. By putting Americans in these trenches would free a lot of French soldiers for the heavier fighting who are now only staying there, and would give the Americans at the same time, actual experience in trench warfare and thus fit them if they are needed.

We would like to publish the letter complete as it is very interesting, but we will be crowded for space, the above will give you a fair idea of the letter.

It takes an Iowan to figure out difficulties. Now we hear of an Iowa Farmer who runs cider through a cream separator and extracts a liquid that has nothing on a mule when it comes to the "kick."

CHAPTER FOUR—CONTINUED.

Both Monsieur and Madame Brisson grew voluble at once, for rarely had it been their fortune to address so attentive an audience. But there were few grains of wheat among the chaff. The two strangers had arrived, it appeared, on the evening of the 22nd, Friday. They were Americans, they said, on a walking tour. Their names? Brisson did not remember; but they would be found on the police registration slip which he had caused them to fill out at once and had sent to the prefecture that very evening. He had noticed on the slip that they had come from Marseilles and were on their way to Nice. Their bags had already arrived from Marseilles, and, at their direction, he had had them brought up from the station.

"Where are the bags now?" asked Lepine.

"They directed that they be sent to Nice," explained Brisson. "'I dispatched them yesterday morning, as I agreed.'"

"You have the receipt?"

"But certainly, sir," and Brisson, while his wife held the light, rummaged in his desk and finally produced the paper in question.

Lepine placed it in his purse beside the 100-franc note.

"Proceed," he said. "In what way did these strangers occupy themselves during their stay?"

They were absent from morning till night, it appeared, walking about the streets, about the docks, visiting the ships in the harbor, climbing the hills back of the town, and even going as far as Cape Cepet, where the great fort is—penetrating, in a word, to every nook and corner which it is possible for visitors to enter. In fact, in the two days of their stay, they had seen more of Toulon than had Brisson in the 20 years of his residence.

The details of these expeditions Brisson had learned with the greatest difficulty, for his guests had talked but little, had kept to themselves, had discouraged his advances, resented his questions, and often pretended that they did not understand—all of which was in itself suspicious. When talking together, they used a language which Brisson supposed to be English; but he was not familiar with English, knew only a few words of it, indeed—"money," "damn," —such words as every one knows. Their French, also was very bad, —much worse at some times than at others * * *

Lepine finally stopped this flow of language, when it became apparent that nothing but chaff remained.

"Do any further questions suggest themselves?" he asked, looking first at Crochard and then at Pigot. "No? You understand, my friends," he added, turning back to the inn keeper and his wife, "that of all this you will say nothing—not even to each other. An incautious word, and you may find yourselves in a most difficult position. On the other hand, if you are careful, if you are reticent, you will not be forgotten."

"We understand, sir," said they both in a breath, and Brisson added, with venom in his voice, "They were swine! I rejoice that they did not get their telegram!"

Lepine jumped as though a pin had been driven into him.

"Their telegram? What do you mean?" he cried.

"About an hour after they were gone," Brisson hastened to explain, "or perhaps two hours—I do not know—a messenger appeared with a telegram addressed to a grotesque name — Zhones, Smeet—I do not remember—in care of the Hotel du Nord. I concluded it was for one of them, and told the messenger it was too late, that the man had departed—to Frejus, to Nice—I did not know whither. So he took the telegram back again."

Lepine's eyes were gleaming as he glanced at Crochard.

"I am glad that you have mentioned this detail, M. Brisson," he said. "I thank you—and you also, Madame!" and with that, he and his companions bade the worthy couple adieu.

Once in the street, Crochard paused.

"I will leave you now, M. Lepine," he said. "You have your work to do—but you do not need me. Should I have anything further to communicate, you will hear from me."

"And if we wish to find you?"

"For the present, I am staying with my friend on the Quai de Cronstadt."

"Very good," said Lepine. "Good night," and in a moment he and Pigot were lost in the darkness.

The rain had ceased and a chill wind had arisen, but Crochard did not seem to feel it, as he walked slowly toward the quays, his head bent in thought. An ironical smile curved his lips, as he picture Lepine off upon the scent first to the prefecture, then to the post office. He would follow it well, of course; he would run it to the end. He would discover, no doubt, the identity of the two travelers; that would not be difficult. Crochard himself had pointed out the way.

But what then? Even if they were found to be men high in the German service, that was of small importance. It proved nothing. They were at liberty to visit Toulon, if they wished to do so; and, after all, their arrival at the quay five minutes before dawn might have been an accident; they might have lingered for a last look at La Liberte without any suspicion of what was about to occur. Such a coincidence, if not probable, was, at least, conceivable; and such, of course, would be their explanation, if an explanation was ever asked for. There was no way to disprove it.

As to the yacht on which they had embarked—well, that, too, may have been an accident — a boat belonging to a friend whom they had come upon unexpectedly and upon which they had been persuaded to take a cruise. Suspicious circumstances — yes, many of them; but no proof, no absolute proof. And nothing, absolutely nothing, to show that the explosion had been caused by any outside agency.

Arrived at the water front, Crochard walked on until he was opposite the wreck. There he sat down, with his legs overhanging the quay. Two or three searchlights were still focussed on the ruin, but the rescue parties had been withdrawn, and only a few sentries remained. He could see how that formidable monster of a ship had been torn and twisted into an inextricable and hideous mass of iron and steel. One turret remained above the water, blown over on its side, its great guns pointing straight at the zenith; but the rest was a mere tangle of metal.

Such destruction could have been wrought only by the explosion of the magazines; no mine or torpedo could have done it. And as he gazed at the mass of wreckage visible above the water, he perceived a certain resemblance to photographs he had seen of the wreck of the Maine. The Maine's forward magazine had exploded; but Crochard knew, as well as M. Delcasse himself, what had caused that explosion.

Perhaps history was repeating itself, as, proverbially, it is supposed to have a way of doing. But Crochard shook his head. If the catastrophe was not an accident, then it was the result of some agency far more subtle than mine or torpedo. And, also, if it was not an accident, those two men who had waited in the shadow of the doorway back of him for the deed to be accomplished, must have had an accomplice. They could not destroy the ship merely by staring at her! Somewhere, somewhere, concealed but not far distant, that accomplice must have awaited the first beam of the rising sun as the signal to hur his thunderbolt, to loose his mysterious power!

What was that power? How had the thing been done? Those, Crochard felt, were the questions to be answered. As to who had done it, or why it had been done—that could wait. But if there existed in the world a force which, directed from a distance, noiseless, invisible, impalpable, could destroy a battleship asleep at her anchorage, then indeed did it behoove France to discover and guard against it!

At last, his head still bent, Crochard arose, crossed the quay, opened the door of Number Ten, and entered.

No doubt it would have interested both him and M. Delcasse to know how nearly parallel the channels of their thoughts had run!

CHAPTER V.

AT THE CAFE DES VOYAGEURS.

M. Delcasse was scarcely out of bed, next morning, when Lepine's card was brought in to him. He smiled as he read on the line scrawled across it: "My report awaits Monsieur."

"Show M. Lepine into the breakfast room," said the minister, "and inform him that I shall be down at once. Also inquire if he has breakfasted. If not, see that he is served."

He hastened on with his toilet, and, five minutes later, joined Lepine, whom he found at his favorite amusement of standing at a window and gazing into the street—an amusement which occupied every idle moment, sometimes with the most astonishing results. Chance plays a larger part in life than most people are willing to admit; Lepine believed in it; went half way to meet it—and, more than once, had seen drifting past him along the pavement the face for which his best men had been searching vainly.

Lepine, it appeared, had already breakfasted, and, while the minister ate, told of the interrogation at the Hotel du Nord. He had sent one of his men to Nice, with the receipts for the bags, and if, as seemed probable, they were still uncalled for, they would be examined at once.

"Though, even if they are still there," Lepine added, "we shall probably discover nothing of moment. One does not place anything of value in a bag and then abandon it. But I have another clue of the first importance," and he produced the 100-franc note. "Here is the note given to Brisson by one of the strangers. You perceive that it is quite new. I suggest that you send the number of this note to the Bank of France, ascertain when and to whom it was issued, and if any other notes of the series were issued at the same time."

"I will do so," said M. Delcasse, and made a note of the number. "I agree with you that this is most important."

"One thing more," went on Lepine, replacing the note in his pocketbook and extracting a slip of paper; "a small thing, but of significance. I have here the police blanks which the two me filled out upon arriving at the Hotel du Nord. Their names, you see, are given as George Arnold and William Smith, their home as New York city, United States of America. If you will notice the 'S' of the word 'Smith,' you will see that it is made in the German manner."

"That is true; but it may mean nothing. There are many Germans who are citizens of the United States.'

"Yes; but the German name is Schmidt, not Smith. I conclude that this man is a German, but was trying to conceal it."

"You may be right," Delcasse assented, with a trace of impatience in his manner; "no doubt you are right. Is there anything more?"

"There is one thing," said Lepine, coloring a little, "which I have kept until the last, because it seems to upset M. Crochard's theory."

"What is that?"

Lepine drew two sheets of yellow tissue paper from his pocketbook.

"An hour after our men left the Hotel du Nord," he said, "a telegram arrived, addressed to this William Smith. Here it is," and he spread out one of the sheets on the desk before the minister.

Delcasse bent forward eagerly and read:

William Smith, Hotel du Nord, Toulon, France: Our mother requests that you abandon trip, cancel all arrangements, and return at once.

Alfred

"Well?" and Delcasse looked up at his companion.

"That would seem to show, sir," said Lepine, "that William Smith was only an ordinary traveler, after all. You will see that it was filed at Brussels at noon of Sunday, the 24th. It was delayed in transmission, and for some reason was not received at Toulon until 9 o'clock in the evening. Messages here are not delivered on Sunday evening after 8 o'clock, and this was held until 7 the next morning. At that hour, William Smith was no longer at the hotel."

"Well?" asked Delcasse a second time.

"Well?" asked Delcasse a second time.

"Well," Lepine continued, "at 10 minutes past 6 on Monday morning, this message was filed at the office here," and he spread out the second sheet of tissue.

Again Delcasse bent forward, and read:

Alfred Smith, Restante, Brussels We continued our trip as planned All well. Next address Nice. William.

"You will see," Lepine went on, "that these messages are such as an ordinary tourist would send and receive."

But Delcasse was not listening. He was reading the message a second time and yet a third, and there was a wrinkle of perplexity between his brows. At last he looked up, and the prefect was astonished at the expression of his face.

"There is one thing I forgot to tell you last night, Lepine," he said. "I did not myself see its significance until I had got to bed. The first telegram received from any foreign power in reference to the disaster was from the German emperor."

Lepine smiled.

"The German emperor was the first to get word of it," he said. "I examined the other telegrams filed Monday morning. At 10 minutes to 7, the German consul here notified the minister of state at Berlin of the explosion. Admiral Bellue did not file his message to you until 40 minutes later. No doubt he wished to assure himself of the extent of the disaster, in order not to alarm you needlessly. You should have received it not later than 8 o'clock.

"It was, in fact, a few minutes before that hour. And when I reached the Elysee palace, I found the president with a message from the kaiser in his hand. It struck me as most peculiar."

"It was ironic, certainly," agreed Lepine, "but, under the circumstances, easily explained."

"You think, then—"

"I think that Crochard has assumed too much; I think that, before we accuse these men, we need more proof."

Delcasse pushed back his chair and paced for some moments nervously about the room At last he sat down again, and rolled and lighted a cigaret.

"You are right," he said, "we need more proof It is for you to find it, if it exists And at this moment, I am interested not so much in the movements of these men, as in the cause of the explosion Even supposing that they had a hand in it, how was it accomplished?"

Lepine returned the telegrams to his pocket.

"I agree with you," he said, "that that is the vital question And I am unable to answer it"

"I shall institute a board of inquiry at once," went on the minister; "I have, in fact, already summoned the officers who will compose it. I will arrange for it to visit the wreck and begin to take evidence today, as it is important that the evidence be secured while the event is still fresh I would suggest that you place some of your men at the disposition of the board"

"Very well, sir," Lepine agreed, and withdrew.

Toulon was awake again, and the streets were thronged as on a fete day. The first shock of the disaster had passed, and the inborn cheerfulness of the people was asserting itself. The excuse for a holiday was not to be overlooked, and every one who could take a day, or even an hour of leisure, did so, and spent it partly on the quays staring at the wreck, partly in the Place de la Liberte listening to the orators, partly in the Place d'Armes watching the men at work draping with black the Maritime Prefecture, where the board of inquiry was to sit, and the church of Saint Louis, where requiem high mass was to be celebrated. Finally as much as remained of the holiday was spent at a cafe before a glass of coffe or aperitif, with the satisfaction of a sacred duty conscientiously performed.

Lepine, as he made his way through the crowd noticed that there was no longer any talk of treachery or treason, even the word "sabotage" was no longer uttered. Every one agreed that the affair was another accident, deplorable indeed, but unavoidable and without dishonor, and so not to be taken too deeply to heart. France could build other battleships! The mercury in the national temperament was asserting itself.

For an hour Lepine walked about with thoughtful face, listening to the talk, watching the crowd, joining a group here and there, catching chance words from passers-by. He had had only three hours' sleep, but he showed no trace of fatigue. Certainly nothing was farther from his thoughts at this moment than that he needed rest.

Brotherly Love.

What is your reason for saying you won't enlist unless you're sent to the Seventy-third infantry?" questioned the recruiting officer

"Beca'se I want to be near me brother that's in th' Seventy-fourth," returned Dennis O'Rourke.

MARGARET MASON'S NEW YORK LETTER

By Margaret Mason.

Mother, may I go out to swim?
Yes, my darling daughter
But be sure to take your rubberized scarf,
Your bathing wrap,
Your knitting bag,
Your beach cushion,
And your beach umbrella,
So you'll be attired as you'd ought'er

There's nothing to it. If you want to be in the swim this season you'll need a wardrobe trunk to carry all the little accessories of your bathing costume.

A bewildering array of beach cushions, round, oblong, on the square or oval in contour in gray cretonnes, linens, satins and taffeta are all matched up with accompanying bags to hold your knitting and beach umbrellas to keep off the ardent sun and attract the no less ardent son. To be a success on the sands or the surf you simply must have one of these swagger sets. You can pick the shape of your cushion to suit your own outlines.

Then there are the stunning bathing wraps of satin or jersey with a rubberized lining. Modern sea nymphs are all wrapped up in these dashing toga like garments. Some are in one toned jersey conspicuous for the richness and vividness of that one toned hue while others are a mass of varicolor and modernist design that would make a scene from the Russian ballet look sick and pallid. Divers ones are bound around the edges with a contrasting tone while again a fringed finish is a favorite.

If you are wearing one of the new fringed scarfs of tinted rubber with a border of squares or dots in a contrasting tone you can turn almost as an effective cold shoulder and a much less involved one than when all done up in one of the voulminour bath wraps.

Much seems to have gone to the aquatic damsels head judging from the Oriental turbans of wound rubberized silk finished with fringe or rubberized tassels, the rubberized Quaker bonnets, rakish rubberized tams with rubberized pompoms and every form of rubberized military cap, irrespective of allies or one piece affair of jersey satin or taffeta, with the accent on the jersey worn over little straight knickers of matching material.

The jersey ones which are particularly smart are banded around the sleeveless armholes and the neckless necks and the knee length hems with embroidered designs of worsted in brightest shades.

The taffeta suits of black or blue are most effectively plain with a piping of gaily colored figured silk kept all on edge or a wide sash girdle of Roman striped, plaid or Oriental designed silk.

Shades of Miss Cleopatra Ptolomey, but the new Egyptian bathing suits quite take the palm (of course a date palm) for being up to date by reverting to the most ancient date. Smartest things in bathing suits in the Nile and in the days of the Rameses have been dug up for our 1917 adornments. The suits are of satin in dark shades—though one of Nile green is most appropriate — and they are little straight lined, one piece models like their more conservative and conventional jersey sisters. They are appliqued, however, around the low neck, arm holes and around the hem with lotus flowers, queer two headed gods and hierogyphics in most approved mummy case designs and colorings There are stockings and bathing shoes and caps shaped like Egyptian headdresses and beach cushions and parasols, and, yes, even knitting bags all appliqued to match.

They are a sort of cross between little Egypt and a package of cigarets and you can't help feel the sands of the desert were a much more fitting setting for 'em than the sands of Bailey's Beach or Atlantic City. Some of the bronzed life saving guards might be pressed into service as Nubian slaves and retainers, just to carry out the local enemy, that you glimpse bobbing above the billows, or resting above the beach pillows.

As for the bathing suits themselves they are surprisingly simple, serviceable and swimable this year They are almost invariably a little straight lined color and a few bathhouses shaped like the pyramids wouldn't be amiss.

Civilization.

Joseph H Odell, in the Outlook.

In the clearing Louis met me with the lunch basket Coffee from a tin cup, bacon, trout flapjacks with maple sugar, but no knife or fork And everything pervaded with the pungent odor of citronella. Suddenly Louis said "What do you reckon this war is all about?" "Civilization," I replied without hesitation; "to save civilization" We smoked our pipes in silence in the lee of a smudge. A quarter of an hour later Louis asked, abruptly, 'What would you say civilization is?"

"What is civilization?" All the afternoon things kept coming into my mind. But it was always "things"—a procession of "things,' an obsession of "things." What is civilization? Clubs, hotels, electric lights, telephones, motor cars, horse shows starched shirts, manicure sets, highballs, cotillions, ice cream, damask table covers high heeled shoes, phonographs, theaters, coats of arms, sex novels, investments, skyscrapers, tooth powder greenbacks, Boston bull terriers, engraved invitations, coffee—perhaps a hundred other specific "things." These insisted upon association with the word civilization They cluttered every channel of my brain I fell over them and hurt my spiritual instincts. I became angry, and bade the irrelevant impedimenta depart.

Then a wisp of remembrance floated over many intervening years and led me quickly onto the right road. Only the merest reminiscence came to me but I knew that when I could verify the reference I should be able to answer Louis' question

The quotation I sent to Louis after my return home is from a speech delivered by Lord Chief Justice Russell before the American Bar association at Saratoga in 1896.

"What, indeed, is true civilization? By its fruits you shall know it. It is not dominion, wealth, material luxury; nay, not even a great literature and education widespread, good though these may be. Civilization is not a veneer; it must penetrate to the very heart and core the societies of men. Its true signs are thought for the poor and suffering, chivalrous regard and respect for woman, the frank recognition of human brotherhood irrespective of race or color or nation or religion, the narrowing of the domain of mere force as a governing factor in the world, abhorrence of what is mean and cruel and vile, ceaseless devotion to the claims of justice."

Yes, Louis, this war is to save civilization, but civilization is not an aggregation of things, it is a consecration of soul

Canada Discards Old Hymns.

From the Montreal Star

Nearly 600 of the hymns that are in the present Methodist hymn book do not appear in the new book which was shown to Toronto conference recently, and will be in the hands of the members of the church next September

More than 300 of the discarded hymns are the work of John and Charles Wesley, founders of Methodism, but the Wesleys are still away in the lead of all other hymn writers in the new book, having 105 to their credit Among the famous and popular hymns that pass from the book are Fanny Crosby's "Safe in the Arms of Jesus" and "Blow Ye the Trumpet, Blow," while "Plunged in a Gulf of Dark Despair" is considered too gloomy a view of life. "Bid Me of Men Beware" is another that goes.

SOME STRANGE INDIAN NAMES

That Red Men's Cognomens Retain Picturesqueness Is Shown by Those Figuring in Recent Land Sale.

That Indian names still possess the early strength and picturesqueness shown by the names that figure prominently in the recent sale of Indian lands in the Standing Rock reservation in North and South Dakota.

An inspection of the list reveals such names as Kate Good Crow, whose nearest neighbor is Barney Two Bears, Mary Yellow Fat adjoins Melda Crow Ghost, while Mrs. Crazy Walking, in the southeast quarter of section 19, 25, has probably reached the state indicated by her name by being in the same section with Elk Ghost.

Mary Lean Dog rather envies Agatha Big Shield, her aristocratic name. In like manner, Jennie Dog Man and Mary Shave Head may be all too willing to assume on short notice the heroic name borne by Morris Thundershield, heir apparent to Long Step Thundershield.

Mrs. Did Not Butcher, judging from her name, is in no condition to supply the wants for her nearest neighbor, Mrs. Frosted Red Fish, who lives on a half section, not far from Helen Difficult.

And on festal days there gather such notables as Francis Many Horses, Joseph Shoot the Bear, Mrs. Stand Grindstone, Mrs. No Two Horns, Phil Broguth, Good Voice Elk, See the Bear, Married to Santee, Her Hole Road, Tiberius Many Wounds, Pull Shoot First and Shave on One Side.

How It Started.

"Who is that man who just spoke to you?"

"I don't know."

"But he spoke as though he knew you."

"Perhaps he does. I may have met him somewhere, but I don't recall his name."

"That's queer. Men don't usually speak to other men unless they know them. Perhaps he's someone you're ashamed to let me know you know."

"I tell you the man is a stranger to me. He may be a minister of the gospel for all I know."

"That isn't very likely. The few ministers you've ever met you could remember easily enough. It's more likely he's a gambler or a barkeeper."

"Great Scott, woman!"

"Oh, there's no use losing your temper. I'm just a poor fool of a woman not supposed to know anything and have any sense at all, but just the same I'm thoroughly convinced you are hiding something from me."

Kind to Father.

Little miss, three years old, very observing, called on her grandaunt the other day. "Come again," said grandaunt in farewell.

"Father next morning said: "Good-by, Little Miss."

"Good-by. Come again," she replied in polite tones.

The High Cost of War.

Girard in the Philadelphia Public Ledger.

Napoleon was such a masterful genius that he made his 20 years French wars pay for themselves. The sequel was that, after Waterlo was fought and his career ended, the French debt was exceedingly small—scarcely greater than it was before the world had heard the name of Bonaparte.

Bismarck learned that trick of making money out of wars. Thus it happened that when the Franco-Prussian conflict was all over and settled for. Germany had $579,000,000 more cash than when she started, and had Alsace and Lorraine to boot.

As Napoleon's two decades of wars ended, the French national debt was only $12 for every inhabitant. When the present war began the debt was $160, and at the end of last year it was $455.

To save her existence France has bled money as heroically as she has bled men.

Waterloo Cost English Heavily.

Wellington is accounted a victor, and England did most to end Napoleon's wars and banish the emperor.

But it cost England vastly more to fight Napoleon than it cost the French at his back. You can see this by the bald figures.

I have said France's debt a century ago was only $12 per person, but Great Britain's debt was then exactly 20 times that sum.

The British debt at the beginning of the present year was $380 for every inhabitant of the kingdom, compared with $75 at the beginning of this war and $240 at Waterloo.

Russia has failed to mobilize her wealth any more efficiently than her man power. Her per capita debt on last New Year's day was only $44—little more than a ninth of England's and less than a 10th of the French.

America's Per Capita Debt $35.

Germany began this war $80 in debt for every citizen of that empire. By the end of last year she was in the hole to the extent of $255

No other people buy their home loans like the French. Two years after Sedan, when the government called for money to pay off a part of Bismarck's appalling indemnity of $1,000,000,000, there were $3,000,000,000 subscribed, or many times the specific amount asked for

English and French debts are not in the form of bonds. They never come due and need never be paid off. They resemble government annuities.

America's heaviest national debt was at the end of the civil war when it amounted to about $100 for every person.

With our new Liberty loan added, we shall have only about $35 each.

If Americans buy government bonds like hot cakes off the grid iron, as do the French, 15,000,000 persons will participate One in every seven persons in France has a piece of his country's debt

First "Touch" Was for $400,000.

The Declaration of Independence was only a year old when the United States made its first foreign "touch." It borrowed $400,000 from France.

Always in the past our war debts were paid off in double quick time First was wiped out the revolution debt and then that of 1812 during Jackson's day at the White House Uncle Sam had no debt and was so flush in the pocket that he actually gave away $18,000,000 to the states

Ten years ago the last civil war bonds, some 4 per cent, were paid off. When President McKinley called for cash to free Cuba he only wanted $200,000,000, but our thrifty folks offered that amount seven times over.

So unless you step out and buy this Liberty loan at a fast clip you will mar the precedents set by your sires.

SPECIAL TAX, OR ATTACKS ON NEWSPAPERS

From the New York Times.

The newspaper business, like any other, should pay its just proportion of the costs of government It always has. Newspapers pay taxes upon their real estate. They pay corporation taxes, they are subject to the federal corporation income tax. The money they pay out for print paper ink and other materials goes to pay the taxes of the producers thereof. Newspapers have never been favored by exemption from taxes They have no desire to be so favored.

What has put into the heads of some senators and representatives the notion that newspapers should be singled out as a subject of special taxation, put in a class apart from all other corporations and property owners, and made to pay taxes not levied upon other similar industries? The house committee proposed an increase in second class postage rates that would have been not merely burdensome but practically prohibitory upon newspaper circulation in parts of the country remote from the seat of publication. There was an attempt to justify this proposed increase by the assertion that the present second class rate does not pay the cost of transportation, that the newspapers are for this reason actually in debt to the government or under obligation to it. Apart from questions of fact involved, as to which there is room for much dispute, the obligation is quite the other way The newspapers of the country perform services for the government that cannot be measured in money terms. They disseminate information, they make the government's policies known to the people, they make daily contributions to the stock of public knowledge, they raise the level of public intelligence. They directly and powerfully assist the government in its appeals to the spirit and patriotism of the people—as in the great part they played in the recent campaign for the Liberty loan Nevertheless, no newspaper wants to be in debt to the government. If the second class postal rates to newspapers are not remunerative, let the government determine the actual cost of newspaper transportation, apart from the cost of transporting magazines and other periodicals, which is an entirely different matter and fix the charge accordingly. The newspapers will not complain of that

The proposed 2 per cent tax upon advertising receipts was another venture in special taxation upon newspapers. It was without any basis in justice or sound policy, it singled out the newspapers as the subject for punishment. It was not proposed that any like tax should be laid upon any other business. Now the Senate committee has under consideration an excess profits tax upon newspapers, progressive to a degree which would make it burdensome in the extreme. This tax seems to have been based upon the theory that newspapers are a war industry. That theory has no foundation whatever. The gross receipts of many newspapers may have been increased during the war, but so have their expenses. The increase is due more to industry and courage and enterprise than to war. It is probably true that the war itself has not greatly increased the property value of newspapers. Unlike munition plants, they produce nothing that is directly used for war purposes. If an industry is to be taxed on war profits, it must be shown that the profits have accrued from war There is no shadow of justification for putting newspapers in a class with factories turning out rifles, powders, shells and cannon

The newspapers of the country are loyal, have always been willing to support the government They are entirely willing to support it now, they will give freely of their profits and their substance to enable the government to pay the costs of war, but they see no justice in the attempt to single them out for special burdens, burdens by far than those imposed upon the majority of other industries. The corporation income tax has been willingly paid It is easily collected That is an indication of the direction in which the government should proceed in its efforts to obtain new revenue The newspapers will make no objection to taxes upon corporate or individual incomes justly and equitably assessed upon all business interests in the country In any system of taxation that may be adopted the precedent that it is not wise to destroy the sources from which revenue is derived should be kept steadily in view

The 1917 Model Bathing Suit.

New York Correspondence of Pittsburgh Dispatch

On the crest of the war time saving spirit comes the 1917 model bathing suit and the economy practiced in buying material makes it almost invisible to the naked eye It would seem that manufacturers, and the women themselves are not wasting any material these patriotic times on special sets of scenery when cloth is needed for soldiers' uniforms. The skirts have retired to the Hindenburg line and the stockings no longer slip down into a shapeless bunch around the calves. For the most part they either are socks which give just a touch of neatness to the ankles or there is no hosiery at all, just bathing shoes, the fancy, high laced kind intended for beach strolling. To balance the cutting off of the skirts which in some cases were given up entirely in the interest of economy, the season's bathing suits have an equal abstinence of cloth or material at the top or upper end, frequently hardly more than a pair of shoulder straps, showing that the dear girls are willing to utilise that which has been discarded in the modern army officer's uniform In a few cases the designers of the suits were not well informed on military strategy, which warns against having lines extended too far Observing the first effect of the war on bathing suits, the economizing on material to a degree which seems almost too patriotic, one wonders if the next step will be to adopt the style of bathing suits which one used to see on photographs of Ostend just as a tribute to Belgium — those suits about the size of a bandanna handkerchief, of zebra stripes around the equator Anyway, these deleted bathing suits are good for the defense of the coast, besides they always insure the presence of plenty of look outs.

Abusing the S. O. S. Signal.

From the Paris Petit Journal.

Count von Ukner, in command of a German corsair (the armed bark Seeadler reported in the Atlantic a month ago), shot at and sank a French steamer after himself sending out the S O S distress signal. The French steamer answering the S. O. S., rushed to the rescue. The details of what happened are given by the captain, who says.

When we received the S O. S. from a ship pretending to be the Norwegian vessel Bergen, I gave orders to rush to the point indicated, at the same time wireless ing that we were coming at full steam When we made the ship she appeared to be floating normally, but with all lights out. Judge of our surprise when within three lengths of her a searchlight was played on us, and the Norwegian flag was lowered and replaced by a German flag.

Seeing that I had fallen into a trap, I turned about, but a shot had already struck us under the water line. Three more shells struck us in quick succession. We were so near the corsair that we could hear the officers gibing at us with cries of "Vive la France!" We launched our boats, but one was hit and four occupants killed. We sent out the S. O. S. and were soon afterward picked up by a British cruiser, the German ship making off.

We Will.

From the Pittsburgh Post.

"You'll chase the Germans out of our country," cried the people assembled at the French port on the arrival of the first of the troops of the Pershing expedition.

"We will," responded the American soldiers.

How like a great nation, confident of its strength and the righteousness of its cause, is the simple dignity of that assurance! It recalls the quiet resoluteness of Dewey at Manila bay: "You may fire, Gridley, when you are ready." No boast of eating dinner in Berlin in a few weeks. No spectacular move.

The champion has entered.

In its life of 160 years, only seven ministers have been pastor of the Scotch Presbyterian church, New York city

PENSIONS FOR MOTHERS URGED

Judge Henry Neil, of Chicago, Explains System at Meeting in English Capital.

London, England, special —A system of mothers' pensions which has been adopted in 30 states in the United States of America, was explained by Judge Henry Neil, of Chicago, the author of the scheme, in an interesting address delivered recently in London Judge Neil is at present visiting the United Kingdom with a view to acquainting people with the system of mothers' pensions, which he would like to see extended to every part of the world, and its provisions so expanded as to abolish forever child poverty in the same way that free public schools have abolished illiteracy Lord Lytton presided over the meeting which was also addressed by Mr George Toulmin, M P., and Miss Maude Royden

Judge Neil who was cordially welcomed when he rose to speak recalled the hostility aroused over 80 years ago in Philadelphia when the idea of free public schools supported by general taxation was first mooted. The supporters of the idea were denounced as anarchists and undesirable citizens and were thrown into prison. Some property owners said it was confiscation to tax one man's property to educate another man's children They declared that each man should pay for the schooling of his own children or their children should go unschooled, and that it would pauperize parents to educate their children at public expense. People who opposed this idea of free public schools declared that if parents who were poor were relieved of paying for the schooling of their own children, these parents would become lazy and shiftless The people of the United States were now no longer of that opinion Last year over $800,000,000 raised by general taxation was willingly spent on free public schools throughout the states.

In 1898, Judge Neil said most of the states adopted juvenile court laws which provided that the children's court could take the children away from the parents when they were not giving them "proper care," and this was often done in cases where poverty was the only excuse for such action In this way tens of thousands of children in the United States were separated from their mothers during the years from 1898 to 1911 and were placed in institutions at great cost to the community In New York city alone $3,500,000 of the rate payers' money was expended in one year on the care of 20,000 children.

Judge Neil told in a simple way how he came to initiate the system of mothers' pensions In January 1911, he went into the juvenile court in Chicago and saw the first case for the day tried under the juvenile court law It was that of a mother with five children clinging around her skirts the woman was so weak physically that she could not stand. Three years before she had been left a widow, and since then she had gone out washing to support her children The excessive work proved too much for her and she was unable to earn more money The landlord ordered her to move, and having nowhere to go she was ordered into court. The woman's anguish when the question of taking her children from her was discussed calmly in the court in her hearing was not lost on Judge Neil These women, he said have nobody to represent them. Then I will. Then and there he took up the cause of struggling mothers. The community paid to have destitute children looked after in costly institutions, why not pay the mothers to look after the children in their own homes? Forthwith he went to the state legislature of Illinois, told them the story of the woman, and asked them to enact a law by which a widowed mother with no reasonable means of support would be furnished with money to support her children out of the common county tax fund The legislature enacted that law without a dissenting vote. Since then it has been adopted with success in 30 states.

The mothers' pensions scheme is in no sense a charity this fact is specifically stated in the notification the mother receives with her first check, and she is put on the county pay roll in exactly the same way as a county judge or the janitor The pension, which averages about $5 a month for each case, is paid monthly, and is granted for children up to the age of 14, though in specific cases it may be given to children up to 16. The pensioned mother is not allowed to go out to work and has to make a report of her expenditure. Some supervision is given, mostly by way of instruction, the object being to educate the mother in the best way of expending the money If a pensioned mother proves unable to handle the money, the pension may be revoked. In practice however, it has been found that when the fear of poverty and the fear of having her children taken from her has been removed, the "bad" mother is almost entirely eliminated and the pension is seldom abused. This system of pensioning mothers, Judge Neil says, has resulted in reducing the cost of maintaining destitute children by about two-thirds.

The scheme has also had wonderful results in checking juvenile crime, which in some districts has been practically stamped out after a six months' trial of the pension system. In New York 10,000 children go into the juvenile court charged with crime, and the judge himself told Judge Neil that 75 per cent of them would never have been there if the mothers had had pensions. Colorado had had a record of no children of pensioned mothers being brought into court charged with crime

Political Conviction.

From the Ohio State Journal

He is a poor citizens who forms his political convictions on the failings of the other side. But most men do Talk with a man five minutes and he will begin to denounce the other side with great enthusiasm. He constructs his political faith entirely out of the weakness of the other side. He has not a word to say about the strength of his own side That doesn't seem to matter So his political enemy embraces horse thieves and villains it makes no difference what his own side is composed of. If the enemy is vile and ornery that determines his opinion without thinking for a moment that his own side may be just as bad

This state of politics puts the nation in a bad fix It does not found public opinion upon virtues and honor, but makes their absence the basis of its faith No worthy citizen will determine his political duty by the faults of his political foe. He will determine it by the integrity and honor of his own party. This manner of judgment attacks the very character of the individual and makes him an unworthy citizen. That there are so many such is what afflicts the country. Every man should examine his own political conviction and if it is not built upon moral purpose and intelligent uprightness he is a disgrace to his party and on his account it ought to be defeated.

To Grow Buckwheat in England.

From the London Chronicle.

Of all the different grains recommended to save wheat just now, buckwheat and rye seem the only two that can be grown and ripened in this country. Buckwheat owes its name to the resemblance of its seed to a beechnut, hence its German name, Buchweizen, corrupted to buckwheat. Hitherto buckwheat has been mostly grown here to feed pheasants, but it is a most nutritious and quite pleasant food for man. It yields very abundantly grows on poor soil, and needs little manure. The only trouble is it does not harvest well in any but dry weather, and that is probably why hitherto it has not been more grown here.

Just So.

From the Kansas City Journal.

"What has become of the old cult for plain living and high thinking?"

"Ought to be stronger than ever now Those who are forced to plain living are doing some tall thinking."

TO GATHER AIR DATA IN HAWAII WITH KITES

Honolulu, T. H —Special—(Correspondence of the Associated Press) —The second meteorological station in the United States for the purpose of gathering of data of the upper air will be erected shortly in Hawaii, in accordance with plans worked out by the weather bureau, it was announced here today. It has been proposed by A. M Hamrick, local representative of the weather bureau, and enthusiastically endorsed by the army authorities of the Hawaiian department, that an electric reel station be built from which will be flown the great kites which carry meteorological instruments aloft The station will, it is announced, be modeled upon one in Omaha, Neb., and will be the only station of the kind in the tropics or semitropics.

Gen R. K. Evans, who was in command of the Hawaiian department when the proposal was first made by Mr Hamrick, took the view that such a station would be of immense advantage to aviators and artillerymen, and he strongly recommended to the war department that it cooperate to the fullest extent with the weather bureau in the proposed work. After going through nearly every department of the weather bureau and every bureau of the war department, Mr. Hamrick's letter came back to him a few days ago with the report that every effort is to be made by both branches of the government to secure the establishment of the proposed station

This is interpreted to mean that as soon as funds are available, work on the construction of the plant will be begun

Mr. Hamrick recently established a weather observation station on Midway island, which is now the farthest west of any weather station, and is receiving daily reports by cable from that distant observation point. The Midway station is the first of a series of observation stations which he hopes to establish throughout the Pacific with a view to making the Honolulu weather bureau a forecasting station At present, on account of lack of data from which to make computations, no forecasts are made here. Mr. Hamrick says that weather predictions will be of immense value to shipping in the Pacific, particularly that plying between Hawaii and the Pacific coast.

Passing of a Toll Road.

Over a century ago the Pennsylvania legislature incorporated a company to build a road from Harrisburg, on the Susquehanna river, to Reading, on the Schuylkill river Tolls have been collected for many years for its use, just as they are collected today in many parts of that commonwealth, at a very high rate for decidedly inferior service in most cases Nine years ago the section of the road from Reading to Wernersville was freed and a little later the section from Harrisburg to Hummelstown but there is still 31½ miles of the old Berks and Dauphin turnpike where the traveler pays about cents per mile for the use of the road which compares favorably, from the toll company's point of view, with the rates for passenger traffic permitted on railroads by the Interstate Commerce commission The only tariffs that exceeds it are probably those for the use of certain mountain roads built by private parties on private land for the accommodation of tourists The condition of the road and the high tolls combined to make any continuation of the conditions impossible, so the state highway department and the three counties traversed by the road have bought it for $75,000 The price shows that even with high tolls such a property is not likely to be profitable

Soldier Slang.

From Spokane Spokesman Review

For the benefit of the readers of this department in England and France many of whom have written us on the subject we have written a short glossary of American soldier slang which we hope will be as valuable to them as recently published glossaries of English and French soldiers' slang have been to us. Here are some of the American soldiers quaint and familiar sayings, translated by us out of the original

Wop—Any brunette foreigner

Dutchman—Any blond foreigner

Beat It—Shorten your line of communication, execute a change of base

Believe me, kid, some chicken'—Quaint American phrase used in ordering roast fowl from a waiter.

He's off his nut—The meaning of this varies in different parts of the United States. Thus, along the coast of Iowa it signifies "His dome's closed for alterations," while among the salmon miners of West Virginia it is used to indicate "Ivory above the collar" There are other variations, but these are the most important.

Main squeeze—Democratic fashion of referring to the president of the United States.

On the blink—Hors du combat.

Jitney—A small coil (equivalent to the German pumper-nickel). Also, a broken down motor vehicle.

Hang up, you've got your wires crossed —I am afraid you have not caught the spirit of my remarks.

Out to lunch—Severely wounded

Chow—Regulation army food, such as lettuce sandwiches or shrimp wiggle.

Bull—Official bulletins, named after Elias Q. Bull, inventor of the bulletin.

To the Kaiser.

From the Beatrice Sun.

Several weeks ago the Sun remarked that somebody should send to the kaiser the list of recruits being enrolled in this country, and pointed out the fact that on one day when 10 recruits were enrolled for C company, a majority of the names were of a pronounced German flavor and at least one of the boys was the son of a former German soldier To keep history straight, it may be noted that two, instead of one, of the recruits were boys whose fathers had served in the German army before migrating to this country

There is another patriotic roll of honor which might be sent to Potsdam It is the list of contributors to the Red Cross fund Nowhere did the appeal to support the American Red Cross find more ready and generous support than in the communities of large German population Hanover township gave over $1,000 to the Red Cross fund A large majority of the contributors speak the German language, are of German birth or ancestry It is a libel both upon the good sense and morals of these people to say, as was said by a high Berlin official to Ambassador Gerard that they are not loyal to America, to its government, its principles and ideals.

The Sandbag Caves of Venice.

From the Christian Herald.

In other cities, when aerial bombardments take place, the citizens run for safety into underground cellars and store places. But, as is well known, Venice has no cellars nor underground places. Around the houses and below the houses there is water. One can hardly dig a few feet below the surface anywhere without coming to water For this reason the ground floors of the houses are made of cement so as to be impermeable to water; but should any flaw or crack appear in them the water soon discovers it and comes bubbling up through it. Venice thus lacking underground cellars, a substitute had to be found for them. Fortunately, it possesses many strongly arched passages, and in these the authorities have provided what are called luoghi di rifugio (places of refuge). They are built of wood and sandbags. They have been constructed in every quarter of the city, and signboards on every corner point out the way to them. And so, when the watchmen sound the alarm on their trumpets, the people, like those of old, flying from the avenger of blood, can run into these refuges and be safe.

Blunder That Helped.

From the Boston Globe.

With their famous faculty for diplomatic blundering, the Germans murdered women and children in an airplane raid on London just in the nick of time to stir up people over here and send them hurrying to the banks to subscribe for Liberty loan bonds.

"'Pardon me, but are you carrying sufficient life insurance to satisfy your conscience?'

"'I am,' said the banker, shortly.

"Could I interest you, then, sir, in a player piano, with electrical attachments at a thousand dollars?'

"'You could not'

"'What about a gold-mounted talking machine in satinwood case reduced to seven hundred and fifty dollars?'

"'Nothing doing'

"'I wonder, sir, if an unexpurgated set of E. P Roe full levant morocco blind tooled, going at five hundred dollars, dirt cheap, would appeal to you?'

"'No, it wouldn't.'

"'Want to buy a filing cabinet sir?'

"'No'

"'Ahem Then what would you say to this five-cent stick of shaving soap—a nickel stick of shaving soap, just to get rid of me? Anything doing sir?'

"'My goodness yes! Here! Take this.'

"'Thank you, sir, and good day.'"

Attacking the Weakest Point.

As a result of his overdevelopment in the wrong direction Dennis, who is now aged ten, had been sent to bed at an unusually early hour with strict injunctions that he was not even to read. After about half an hour of repentant quietness a subdued but insistent call of "marmie" was heard downstairs.

"What is it?" came the impatient reply.

"Can't I read a bit of the Bible?" pleaded a sorrowful voice.

How He Led the Class.

There was some doubt as to whether Johnny [illegible] of Muncie would be promoted this year, his mind having run largely to baseball and other matters extraneous to school but he managed to "get through." As he came home waving his report card his mother asked rather fearfully "And how did you stand, son?"

Armory Has No Room For "Old Man Glooms"

No Need to Worry Say Soldiers Over Fate to Be Met in France.

Old Man Gloom and his children, the little glooms have no place at the local armory where the "why worry" sign has been hung out.

Now that the men have passed the stage where they find blisters on their heels after a five mile hike, and bruises on various parts of their bodies inflicted by a government Springfield at the close of the daily drill, all have reached the decision that there is nothing to worry about. The philosophers have reduced the uncertainties of war to the following conclusions.

"For me one of two things is certain Either I will be assigned to duty with the new army or I will stay at home. If I stay at home there is no need to worry. If I am called to duty, one of two things is certain: Either I will go to France to fight or I will stay in the United States to drill.

"If I stay in the United States and drill there is no need for worry. If I go to France, one of two things is certain: Either I will be sent to the front or I will stay in a safe place in the rear. If I stay in the rear there is no need for worry: If I go to the front then one of two things is certain to happen: Either I will be wounded or I will not be wounded. If I am not wounded there is no need for worry.

"If I am wounded one of two things is certain. Either I will be seriously wounded, or I will be slightly wounded. If I am slightly wounded there is no need for worry. If I am seriously wounded I will either die or get well. If I get well there is no need to worry, and if I die I can't worry."
—Mason City Globe-Gazette.

Ray Jorgenson was at Klemme Wednesday and made a deal whereby he became the owner of the Klemme Newspaper. This deal was made n a hurry and comes as a surprise to all. Mr. Jorgenson has been looking for a newspaper plant ever since he left the Democrat and has we think got into a town where he can make some money in that business.

He is a good printer and knows the trade. He is also a very pleasant gentleman to do business with and we know the Klemme people will do their share in giving him all of their patronage.

M. M. Magnor the former editor of the Times has been wanting to sell his plant for some time but we do not know what his future plans are at this time. The deal includes the building also the fixtures and equipment and everything connected with the plant.

We wish Mr. Jorgenson the best of success and prosperity in Klemme.

Milkly Lake, Fireless Smoke

The people of Bedford must be hitting the "wet stuff" and are seeing things lately according to the following article taken from the Mason City Globe-Gazette. The bone dry enforcement is taking a good hold, it used to be "seeing snakes" but now when it comes to a lake of nice milk and fireless smoke, we give it up.

"Bedford, Iowa,—Two interesting phenomena have been engaging the attention of the people of Bedford, Sharpsburg and vicinity. At the lake belonging to J. M. Reardon and from which part of the ice supply for Bedford is harvested each year, the water has been of a milky white color and the fish in the lake were seen coming to the surface for air and many dead fish appeared on the surface. It was suggested that the water had uncovered a lime deposit in the earth. A sample of the water has been sent to Des Moines for analysis.

"On the Ed. Rutledge farm near Sharpsburg, smoke has been seen issuing from the ground. No fire of any kind can be found. The smoke has the appearance of a thin mist and has a peculiar odor. Geologists have been asked to investigate the phenomena."

A Wonderful Inuention

Reports come from Washington, D. C., on a resolution providing for a test of a wonderful and mysterious machine which the inventor claims can propel an airplane from Washington to the European battlefields or elsewhere, and back again to its base without fuel, was voted on by the house committee. T. K. Giragossian, the inventor, says his invention harnesses an untapped ocean of power at a trivial cost. The committee's resolution would guarantee government protection in the case that he demonstrates the usefullness of the machine to five noted scientists.

Klemme Will Have A Band

We have talked with several of the band boys and they are talking of reorganizing the band once more and give Klemme some open air concerts in the park this summer. They have lacked a bass player, and as luck will have it, that is the instrument played by Ye Editor, and we offer our services. It will take a few weeks to work up some music but we are sure of concerts sometime in the near future. Boost for the band.

Six Garner Boys Enlist

Sargeant Kelter, a Recruiting officer was over from Mason City this week asking for enlistments for the army. Elmer Nelson, Glynn Mitchell, Webb. Haskins, Herbert Babb, Leonard Brede and Shorty Sweeny enlisted for service and took the 6 38 to Mason City for examination and will go from there to a training camp, to Denver, probably. The Band was at the station and also the largest audience of friends that were ever at the station were there to bid farewell to the Garner boys This was a sad parting, to see the boys leave and many a tear was shed by home folks and friends of the boys. We know that these boys will remember the parting words of all and their many friends will think of them continually

After the boys departure it was suggested to take up a little contribution for them and in a few minutes over $70 was raised F. W. Zeiger, Will Armentrout and other Garner men drove over to Mason in Mr Zeiger's car and presented this sum to the boys—about $12 a piece and report that the boys could not express their greatfulness for the kindness

HOW SHALL WE PAY FOR THE WAR?

A Constructive Criticism on the House Revenue Bill.

LOANS BETTER THAN TAXES

Five Reasons Why Excessive Taxes at the Outset of War Are Disadvantageous—Great Britain Example Worthy of Emulation—How the Taxes Should Be Apportioned.

By EDWIN R. A. SELIGMAN,
McVickar Professor of Political Economy, Columbia University

On May 23, 1917, the House of Representatives passed an act "to provide revenue to defray war expenses and for other purposes." In the original bill as presented by the Committee of Ways and Means, the additional revenue to be derived was estimated at $1,810,420,000. The amendment to the income tax, which was tacked on to the bill during the discussion in the House, was expected to yield another $40,000,000 or $50,000,000.

In discussing the House bill, two problems arise:

I. How much should be raised by taxation?

II. In what manner should this sum be raised?

I. How Much Should Be Raised by Taxation?

How was the figure of $1,800,000,000 arrived at? The answer is simple. When the Secretary of the Treasury came to estimate the additional war expenses for the year 1917-18, he calculated that they would amount to some $6,000,000,000, of which $2,000,000,000 was to be allotted to the allies and $3,000,000,000 was to be utilized for the domestic purposes. Thinking that it would be a fair proposition to divide this latter sum between loans and taxes, he concluded that the amount to be raised by taxes was $1,800,000,000.

There are two extreme theories, each of which may be dismissed with scant courtesy. The one is that all war expenditures should be defrayed by loans, and the other is that all war expenditures should be defrayed by taxes. Each theory is untenable.

It is indeed true that the burdens of the war should be borne by the present rather than the future generation; but this does not mean that they should be borne by the present generation.

Meeting all war expenses by taxation makes the taxpayers in one or two years bear the burden of benefits that ought to be distributed at least over a decade within the same generation.

In the second place, when expenditures approach the gigantic sums of present-day warfare, the tax-only policy would require more than the total surplus of social income. Were this absolutely necessary, the ensuing havoc in the economic life of the community would have to be endured. But where the disasters are so great and at the same time so unnecessary, the tax-only policy may be declared impracticable.

Secretary McAdoo had the right instinct and highly commendable courage in deciding that a substantial portion, at least, of the revenues should be derived from taxation. But when he hit upon the plan of 30-50 per cent, that is, of raising one-half of all domestic war expenditures by taxes, the question arises whether he did not go too far.

The relative proportion of loans to taxes is after all a purely business proposition. Not to rely to a large extent on loans at the outset of a war is a mistake.

Disadvantages of Excessive Taxes.

The disadvantages of excessive taxes at the outset of the war are as follows:

1. Excessive taxes on consumption will cause popular resentment.

2. Excessive taxes on industry will disarrange business, damp enthusiasm and restrict the spirit of enterprise at the very time when the opposite is needed.

3. Excessive taxes on incomes will deplete the surplus available for investments and interfere with the placing of the enormous loans which will be necessary in any event.

4. Excessive taxes on wealth will cause a serious diminution of the incomes which are at present largely drawn upon for the support of educational and philanthropic enterprises. Moreover, these sources of support would be dried up precisely at the time when the need would be greatest.

5. Excessive taxation at the outset of the war will reduce the elasticity available for the increasing demands that are soon to come.

Great Britain's Policy.

Take Great Britain as an example. During the first year of the war she increased taxes only slightly, in order to keep industries going at top notch. During the second year she raised by new taxes only 9 per cent. of her war expenditures. During the third year she levied by additional taxes (over and above the pre-war level) only slightly more than 17 per cent. of her war expenses.

If we should attempt to do as much in the first year of the war as Great Britain did in the third year it would suffice to raise by taxation $1,250,000,000. If, in order to be absolutely on the safe side, it seemed advisable to increase the sum to $1,500,000,000, this should, in our opinion, be the maximum.

In considering the apportionment of the extraordinary burden of taxes in war times certain scientific principles are definitely established:

How Taxes Should Be Apportioned.

(1) The burden of taxes must be spread as far as possible over the whole community so as to cause each individual to share in the sacrifices according to his ability to pay and according to his share in the Government.

(2) Taxes on consumption, which are necessarily borne by the community at large, should be imposed as far as possible on articles of quasi-luxury rather than on those of necessity.

(3) Excises should be imposed as far as possible upon commodities in the hands of the final consumer rather than upon the articles which serve primarily as raw material for further production.

(4) Taxes upon business should be imposed as far as possible upon net earnings rather than upon gross receipts or capital invested.

(5) Taxes upon income which will necessarily be severe should be both differentiated and graduated. That is, there should be a distinction between earned and unearned incomes and there should be a higher rate upon the larger incomes. It is essential, however, not to make the income rate so excessive as to lead to evasion, administrative difficulties, or to the more fundamental objections which have been urged above.

(6) The excess profits which are to the war constitute the most obvious and reasonable source of revenue during war times. But the principle upon which these war-profit taxes are laid must be equitable in theory and easily calculable in practice.

The Proposed Income Tax.

The additional income tax as passed by the House runs up to a rate of 60 per cent. This is a sum unheard of in the history of civilized society. It must be remembered that it was only after the first year of the war that Great Britain increased her income tax to the maximum of 51 per cent., and that even now in the fourth year of the war the income tax does not exceed 42 per cent.

It could easily be shown that a tax with rates on moderate incomes substantially less than in Great Britain and on the larger incomes about as high, would yield only slightly less than the $532,000,000 originally estimated in the House bill.

It is to be hoped that the Senate will reduce the total rate on the highest incomes to 31 per cent, or at most 34 per cent, and that at the same time it will reduce the rate on the smaller incomes derived from personal or professional earnings.

If the war continues we shall have to depend more and more upon the income tax. By imposing excessive rates now we are not only endangering the future, but are inviting a repetition of difficulties which even Great Britain has been able to escape.

Conclusion.

The House bill contains other fundamental defects which may be summed up as follows:

(1) It pursues an erroneous principle in imposing retroactive taxes.

(2) It selects an unjust and unworkable criterion for the excess-profits tax.

(3) It proceeds to an unheard-of height in the income tax.

(4) It imposes unwarranted burdens upon the consumption of the community.

(5) It is calculated to throw business into confusion by levying taxes on gross receipts instead of upon commodities.

(6) It fails to make a proper use of stamp taxes.

(7) It follows an unscientific system in its flat rate on imports.

(8) It includes a multiplicity of petty and unlucrative taxes, the vexatiousness of which is out of all proportion to the revenue they produce.

* * * * * * *

The fundamental lines on which the House bill should be modified are summed up herewith:

(1) The amount of new taxation should be limited to $1,250,000,000—or at the outset to $1,500,000,000. To do more than this would be as unwise as it is unnecessary. To do even this would be to do more than has ever been done by any civilized Government in time of stress.

(2) The excess-profits tax based upon a sound system ought to yield about $500,000,000.

(3) The income-tax schedule ought to be revised with a lowering of the rates on earned incomes below $10,000, and with an analogous lowering of the rates on the higher incomes, so as not to exceed 34 per cent. A careful calculation shows that an income tax of this kind would yield some $450,000,000 additional.

(4) The tax on whisky and tobacco ought to remain approximately as it is, with a yield of about $230,000,000.

These three taxes, together with the stamp tax at even the low rate of the House bill, and with an improved automobile tax, will yield over $1,250,000,000, which is the amount of money thought desirable.

The above program would be in harmony with an approved scientific system. It will do away with almost all of the complaints that are being urged against the present. It will refrain from taxing the consumption of the poor.

It will throw a far heavier burden upon the rich, but will not go to the extremes of confiscation. It will obviate interference with business and will keep unimpaired the social productivity of the community.

It will establish a just balance between loans and taxes and will not succumb to the danger of approaching either the tax-only policy or the loan-only policy. Above all, it will keep an undisturbed elastic margin, which must be more and more heavily drawn upon as the war proceeds.

THE KLEMME TIMES

Ray A. Jorgenson, Pub.

KLEMME, IOWA

That Japanese women constantly are taking a larger part in the activities of the empire is shown by recent investigations. There are 4,000 women working under the railway bureau, most of them ticket sellers, cashiers and accountants, and 6,000 women find employment in the cigar and cigaret factories of the government tobacco monopoly. Their wages range from 10 to 25 cents a day. Male clerks in banks and mercantile houses constantly are being replaced by women, who receive $5 to $15 a month. Actresses receive the highest wages paid to women in Japan. The lowest salary among them is $35 to $80 a month and the highest about $150.

British monitors played an important part in the Italian advance upon Triest. They took up positions midway up the gulf where their guns could bear upon the airplane hangars and the multifarious military establishments which surround Presecco and Contovello, twin villages upon the main road and railway to Triest, both constituting important depots for the Austrian air service and general supplies. The second shot landed a little north of the first, hitting the railway again at a point where a Triest bound train was passing. The train vanished in ruin.

Voicing Japan's regret that undesirable tendencies have appeared among government officials, Premier Count Terauchi has issued a set of instructions telling those holding office under him not to be misled in any way by what has happened or what is happening in foreign countries, where conditions are greatly different from those in Japan. He asks them to stand always for the foundamental principles of the imperial constitution, which is to be always the true guide for the management of the affairs of the nation.

Sweden's receipts from the increased tobacco taxes of 1916, which the kingdom's budget commission had estimated at 10,000,000 crowns when the tax was laid, amounted to 15,290,000 crowns. Part of this sum was secured by the elimination of wholesale dealers, the state monopoly now selling direct to retailers. Prices were increased sharply a few months ago, particularly for cigarets, which now cost on the average 100 per cent more than is asked for the same brands in Germany.

Lack of raw materials, principally soda, already has compelled Swedish glass manufacturers to restrict production, and it is feared that it will have to cease altogether in two or three months unless import conditions change. The Swedish glass industry, which is considerably more than 200 years old, is one of the country's most important industries, employing nearly 6,000 persons and having an annual output around $3,500,000, of which more than one-third is exported.

To the already long list of controllers is added the tobacco controller. This step has been taken by the government in order to regulate supplies and prices to retailers and to conserve a full supply for the army. The consumer is likely to be rationed in the near future as all stocks in the country have been taken over by the controller There are now seven controllers, of shipping, drink, food, coal mines, railways, potatoes and tobacco.

Alfred Gerl, the dealer in antiquities, of Florence, Italy, through whom Leonard ode Vinci's celebrated painting, the Joconde, was restored to the Louvre museum, has brought action against the French government to recover a premium of 10 per cent of the value of the picture. Estimating it to be worth 1,000,000 francs he asks for 100,000 francs. The French government refused the claim and the case will come up in court at an early date.

The commercial travelers of the United Kingdom in convention at Liverpool went on record in favor of a greater knowledge of foreign languages and the fostering of a policy of catering to foreign customers' requirements. "The 'take it or leave it' policy, which has played into the hands of German competitors, must be abandoned," said a resolution.

Long lines of persons wailing for articles of food, common sights in the streets of the cities of Germany, now are seen in Swedon. The Gothenburg police estimate that more than 10,000 persons mainly women and children formed a line to get their share of some potatoes bought by the city and sold in small quantities to residents of Gothenburg.

The price of a pair of oxen in Brussels is now the equivalent of $1,600, according to information received in Belgian official circles here. Besides a few donkeys oxen are about the only means the Belgian population has for the transportation of goods and merchandise Even these are being requisitioned by the Germans.

HOPPERS DESTROYING FARM CROPS IN IOWA

Much Damage Is Reported in Neighborhood of Atlantic—Expert Views Field.

Atlantic, Ia., July 14.—John Comes, a well known Washington township farmer, reports that his farm is overrun with grasshoppers resulting in the loss of considerable grain and pasture.

The "hoppers" have ruined a field of wheat, stripping leaves completely off the stalks. An adjoining pasture has been practically rendered useless. On the adjoining farm of Mr. Zellmer the "hoppers' have worked in a field of oats to such an extent that the crop is being cut for forage. The insects have also crossed a narrow bit of pastureland and begun their work of destruction in a larger oat field. This grain appears more attractive to grasshoppers than any other.

Professor Carson, of Ames, who is a member of the faculty of the summer school, visited the Comes farm to inspect the work of destruction. According to Mr. Carson, nothing but fall plowing is likely to destroy the crop of this year's eggs which would hatch out a new supply of insects next spring. So far as concerns the present situation there is nothing that can be done.

HARDING RESENTS STORY GUARDS PAY OWN BILLS

Among other statements, the truth of which the governor denies, was one that "large numbers of the embryo soldiers all over the state are paying their own expenses in training to fight for Uncle Sam."

SPY IS BLAMED FOR HUGE FACTORY LOSS

Cooper Plant at Dubuque, Making Vehicles for Allies, Burns —Loss $500,000.

Dubuque, Ia., July 14.—Fire of unknown origin early this morning totally destroyed the large lumber sheds of the A. A. Cooper company, the oldest and largest wagon and buggy manufacturing concern in the country and burned hundreds of tons of coal stored in adjoining sheds, doing a total damage estimated at over $500,000.

This is the second serious fire the Cooper concern has suffered in the past 15 months; the other one doing a damage of over $250,000.

The Cooper company is the holder of numerous large contracts for the allies and has been engaged for the past two and a half years in manufacturing vehicles for the entente forces. Realizing that the German spies are blamed, regardless, for all fires, explosions and the like, that happen in the plants of the holders of entente contracts, it is openly expressed by prominent authorities, nevertheless, that this fire was probably incendiary, the match having been applied by a German spy or sympathizer.

Most of the lumber destroyed by the flames was valued at $150 a thousand feet and officers of the company stated that a great share of these seasoned planks could not be duplicated anywhere.

Dozens of boathouses, launches and government river improvement fleet boats just escaped being burned when their masters towed them away from the scene. Several cars of merchandise, stationed on nearby sidings, were destroyed, and one long train of cars filled with inflammable materials was pulled to safety only after the sides of many of the cars had become scorched and started to burn.

Nothing but the fact that little, if any wind was prevalent, saved the entire wholesale and jobbing section of the city, as burning embers several feet in length were sent upwards to great heights owing to the intense heat generated by the flames.

It is said that most of the loss is covered by insurance.

FINE CATHOLIC CHURCH DEDICATED AT SPENCER

About 40 visiting clergymen attended the consecration. The dedication was in charge of Bishop P J. Garrigan of Sioux City.

At the appointed hour, 10 30, the ecclesiastical procession moved from the old church and led by a cross bearer followed by the bishop and attending priests and bishop in full pontificial vestments, marched to the new church There they paused at the entrance which was first blessed by the bishop who sprinkled holy water upon it, then marched around the entire edifice, sprinkling and blessing the new house of worship.

Mass was conducted by the Rev Mr Norton, now of Waukon, Ia, who was pastor of the first Catholic church here over 40 years ago. The sermon of the day was delivered by the Rev P P Farrelly, of Emmetsburg, Ia. Afterwards Bishop Garrigan congratulated the congregation and the pastor, the Rev. B. A Hunt

The interior is hard finish and the walls ornamented with the "Stations of Christ" The chancel and the maiden altar are beautifully designed and furnished.

IOWA CROP REPORT VERY ENCOURAGING

Much of Corn Crop "Laid By"—Oats, Rye and Wheat Harvest Has Begun.

Des Moines, Ia., July 13.—One of the most encouraging crop reports yet issued in Iowa was made public today by George H. M. Chappel, director of the Iowa weather and crop service. The report for the week ending July 10 shows all farm and garden crops to be in flourishing condition. The report follows:

The weather during the week was almost ideal for farm work. There was a slight deficiency in temperature, and a decided deficiency of rainfall generally, except in a few favored localities, especially in the east central and extreme northwestern counties where heavy showers occurred. The fore part of the week was cool, with the night temperatures near the frost line in the northern districts, but the latter half of the week was much warmer. Corn made rapid growth and much of it has been "laid by." The crop is however, very uneven in size. Some fields are nearly waist high, while many fields are only a few inches high. All small grain continues in good condition and filling well. The rye harvest has begun in Henry and Des Moines counties, and early oats and winter wheat harvest will become general in the southern counties by the latter part of the coming week. Truck crops are excellent.

The following summary shows the condition of crops on July 1 Corn 87 per cent, oats, 102, spring wheat, 99; winter wheat, 80, barley, 98; rye and flax, 94, potatoes, 106, hay, 83; pastures, 95 per cent. Last year on July 1, the condition was as follows. Corn, 85 per cent, oats, 94, spring wheat, 92, winter wheat, 80, barley, 95, rye, 93, flax, 90, potatoes, 97, hay, 96, pastures, 100 per cent.

The state horticulture society shows condition of fruit as follows. Summer apples, 75 per cent, fall apples 64, winter apples, 54; pears, 44, American plums, 34, domestic plums, 24, cherries, 62; grapes, 50, red raspberries, 51 black raspberries, 53, blackberries, 47, per cent of a full crop. The average for all fruits is 51 per cent, or 1 per cent higher than the average for July last year. The apple crop promises to be 20 per cent better than it was a year ago, while smaller fruits will be 20 per cent less.

That woman's sphere in Iowa does extend beyond the portals of the kitchen to the farm is readily seen from the fact that there are now some 16,000 women in the state who own or directly manage farms These women a year ago at the Ames winter short course organized into the Iowa Farm Women's association. War conditions will undoubtedly increase women's activity in farming still more.

SHARP ADVANCE IN STATE TAX ASSURED

Executive Council Meeting to Fix Valuations for Taxing Purposes.

Des Moines, Ia., July 12.—The state executive council began its work as a board of review Monday to consider the valuations of property of the state for taxation purposes. As is the usual custom, the council will pass upon the properties of the railroads, express, telephone and telephone companies and similar public utilities. These corporations get their reports in early, whereas the valuations from the counties sent in by county auditors are usually delayed

Although the counties not getting in their reports by July 1 are subject to a fine, there were still five counties out Saturday After deciding on the valuations to be fixed for the railroads and other public utilities properties the state council will take up the reports of the county auditors and consider the values reported on land city property, live stock, personal property, moneys and credits and all other property which is subject to assessment

It is generally recognized that the state taxes will have to be raised about 2½ mills this year in order to meet the appropriations authorized by the last legislature The tax levy will, therefore be around 7 mills for state purposes as against 4 33 mills, the levy for the past biennial period

In the present biennial period, starting July 1 of this year and ending June 30 1918, the state must raise $13,000,000 by direct taxes. In addition to this it is anticipated that some $7,000,000 will come in through fees.

In the last biennial period, ending June 30 of this year, the state raised over $8,000,000 by direct taxation

The last legislature authorized appropriations amounting to $7,000,000 the first year of the new biennial period and $6,000,000 the second year To produce this amount on the present valuations of Iowa property will require a tax of about 7 mills.

The biggest increase in the cost of running the state during the next two years is compared to the biennial period just closed, is the $1,000,000 war appropriation

Since July 1 when the Iowa National Guard recruits were called out for training at their home camps the state has been expending about $10,000 per day for the maintenance of these troops This expenditure will be continued until the men are mustered out of service It is expected however, that the government eventually will refund to the state This expenditure will amount to about the $1,000,000

WILSON OPPOSES GORE FOOD BILL INTERESTS BACK

Representing the Concessions of Those Who Would Enrich Themselves, It Provides No Relief for People.

NO AUTHORITY IS GIVEN

President's Action in Going on Record Against Substitute Will Be Taken Early.

Washington, July 14.—In a letter to Senator Martin democratic floor leader, President Wilson today gave his views on food control legislation, advocating action along the line of the original House bill for government control of foodstuffs and fuel only He opposed the proposed substitute bill of Senator Gore, and emphasized his desire for prompt action by congress.

Washington, July 14.—Administration leaders in the Senate let it be known today that President Wilson is expected to use his influence to prevent emasculation of the food control bill

The president is opposed to the pending bill offered by Senator Gore chairman of the agricultural committee as a substitute for the House measure, and which greatly restricts the proposed government control over foods and many other articles

Herbert C Hoover food administrator conferred today with Senator Chamberlain in charge of the Senate bill, before the Senate resumed debate Mr. Hoover is understood to have strongly opposed the Gore measure urging that it would virtually nullify the objects which the administration hopes to obtain, and leave the government without substantial authority to meet conditions it is desired to remedy

The president's views upon legislation needed probably will be conveyed through a letter to Senator Martin, democratic leader after he has studied the House and Gore substitute bills It is expected that the president's letter will be sent early next week, in ample time for consideration before the Senate's final vote set for July 21

NO RELIEF IN SUBSTITUTE.

Washington, July 14 - President Wilson will not accept the Gore substitute for the food control bill it was asserted on high authority today Both he and Herbert C Hoover are opposed to it. The substitute represents what the powerful special interests that have been fighting the Hoover plan are willing to accept, but it is so framed that there is no reason to believe it would give the public relief from high living cost.

Debate in the Senate today centered upon the section of the bill prohibiting any member of an advisory commission board or council of the government to sell supplies to the government in which he is financially interested.

Senator Sherman declared that if the members of the Senate or the House had done what some of the members of the commission are doing, "we would be impeached and sent to the penitentiary."

RUSSIANS OPEN NEW BATTLE

Teutonic Forces Try to Check Slavs Crossing Lomnica and Fierce Fighting Develops.

General Korniloff's Russian armies which already have driven a vast wedge into the Teutonic lines in eastern Galicia, appear to be at the crucil point of their campaign for Lemberg.

Having crossed the river Lomnica, behind which the Austro-German forces planted themselves in their retreat from the Halicz region, the Russians have opened up the possibility of turning the whole Teutonic line northward along the Zelota Lipa.

Desperate attempts were made by the Teutonic armies, however, to prevent the continuation of this menacing advance beyond the Lomnica and the battles now in progress may be vital in determining the fate of Lemberg, and all the eastern Galician terrain

At Kalusz the Russians took 860 prisoners, chiefly Germans, and five heavy guns, besides 10 machine guns.

On the French front Paris mentions sporadic artillery activity on the Aisne front and north of Verdun. Several assults have failed

General Haig's troops in northern France continue comparatively inactive.

RUMANIANS ARE ACTIVE.

Berlin, July 13.—Russian attacks at several places on the Lomnica line in Galicia between the Dniester and the Carpathians were repulsed yesterday, the war office announces. Increased activity on the Rumanian front is reported.

KENYON'S PLAN TO PASS, LEADERS SAY

President Told Sentiment to Bar Officials From War Contracts Grows.

From The Tribune Washington Bureau.

HAVNER ORDERS FOOD AND FUEL PRICES PROBED

Attorney General Checks It Up to County Attorneys to Ascertain Cause of High Prices.

ACTION URGED BY HARDING

Governor Believes That Dealers Are in Combines to Boost Prices and Restrain Competition.

Des Moines, Ia., July 14.—Although Attorney General Havner has been unable thus far to find any evidence of combines in Iowa to boost the price of food and fuel, he has undertaken a sweeping investigation of the subject. His investigations thus far have been of a personal nature, he told Governor Harding today. Now he will enlist the assistance of the county attorneys of the state.

Governor Harding believes that combinations in restraint of trade do exist and has written a letter to the attorney general urging him to go into the matter fully Mr Havner told the governor today that he had been unable, thus far, to get facts that would support that belief

The attorney general has agreed to make another try, however, and has sent out a letter to county attorneys asking them to investigate local conditions and with the aid of peace officers endeavor to find evidence upon which to base prosecutions.

The new investigation will include all persons engaged in handling food stuffs and fuel from the time they leave the hands of the producers until they reach the ultimate consumer An attempt will be made to ascertain if foodstuffs are being stored to await higher prices.

It is understood the investigation will extend to commission merchants, retail dealers' associations in the various cities, etc. The attorney general puts it up to the county attorneys of the various counties of the state to ascertain whether the state's antitrust laws are being complied with

Following is the text of the letter sent to Havner by Governor Harding

Hon H M Havner, Attorney General State House

Dear Mr Havner Attention is directed to certain matters which are vital to our people at this time. I refer to the price of food, fuel and other commodities

There is too great a difference between the price which the original producer receives and that which the ultimate consumer pays. There is such uniformity of price charged to the consumer that it seems to me that it is imperative that some action by the state be taken to bring relief to the people

The burden of the war on our citizens is heavy enough without the extraordinary profits that are now being imposed Federal investigations have developed that there are national combinations Price conditions to the consumer make it almost conclusive that there is unlawful combination in this state.

"Therefore something should be done to relieve the situation. The average wage earner is finding it almost impossible to pay the toll that is exacted and live during this season of plenty What it will be during the winter time is beyond thought Sons are going to the front and leaving dependents to struggle as best they can. The state will see to it that this situation is not taken advantage of by pirates.

"You have at your command special agents and money to make investigations and statutes by which violators may be prosecuted

"This question was presented by this office to the county attorneys and district judges at their session at Council Bluffs in the latter days of June Both have replied and stated that they are aware of the unusual condition, and I am sure from their response will aid in every way possible This office stands ready to lend every assistance possible Cordially yours,

"W L. Harding."

Railroads Want Public Build Lines for Them and Then Pay Dividends

Washington, July 14.—In a hot reply to President Rea of the Pennsylvania railroad, who recently criticised the failure of the Interstate Commerce commission to increase rates 15 per cent, Clifford Thorne, Luther Walther and Grady Cary, representing the National Shippers' conference, show up the unfair and fallacious nature of Rea's statements.

They declare Rea wants the public to build his road and then pay return on it. They disclose the facts concerning the enormous railroad earnings of the Pennsylvania and other lines and show how little the claim for higher rates is justified

It was fully expected when the commission denied the roads all they wanted, though granting part of the advance that outcry would go up from the roads and the financial interests in league with them This expectation has been fulfilled. As a matter of fact, it is difficult to show that the roads were entitled to any increase and they would probably have got none had not the commission, following its bent of recent years, shown more regard for the demands of the roads than for the extent to which the public is burdened.

"The reply says in part

"The record in this case shows, that Mr Rea admitted that 6 per cent is a reasonable dividend on a railroad stock that during the past 10 years the Pennsylvania railroad has paid this amount every year that in addition to this the public has given the Pennsylvania a tremendous surplus out of which this company has increased its property by more than $200,000 000 During these 10 years the owners of this property have invested only $100,000,000 In other words, the public during the past 10 years has built over twice as much of the Pennsylvania railroad as the owners themselves have invested in the property and this is in addition to a reasonable dividend every year Mr. Rea does not want to issue stocks and bonds in order to improve his property He wants the public to build his property for him, and then pay a return upon what we build."

TO DRAFT 687,000 SOON

These Will Be Used to Fill the New National Army, Regulars and National Guard.

Washington, July 14.—Formal announcement was made by the war department today that 687,000 men will be selected from those registered on June 5 for the first national war army and to fill up vacancies in the national guard and the regular army.

The statement of the quota of men which western states will furnish includes the following Iowa, 12,749, Minnesota, 17,854, Nebraska, 8,185, North Dakota, 5,606, and South Dakota 2,717

Enlistment Credits Given.

The table from which the net quotas were compiled shows that all enlistments in the National Guard and the regular army up to June 30 have been allowed as credits. The instruction to governors from the secretary of war accompanying the table directs governors of the various states to allot the state quota as given among the exemption board districts, so that each board in each district will know exactly the number of men to be furnished by the district in filling the state quota

Contrary to expectations the government has allowed credit for the total strength of the National Guard including all those men who were in the service prior to April 1 and who have been retained The figures are given as follows

Nearly 500,000 Enlist.

Total strength of National Guard on April 1, 1917, 164,293.

Enlisted in the National Guard between April 1 and June 30, 183,719

Enlisted in the regular army between April 1 and June 30, 117,974.

Total credits allowed for 465,985

This means that according to the estimates of the government officials the United States now has enrolled or under arms approximately, 467,000 men, classed as war volunteers and therefore constitute credits to be allowed to the states from which they enlisted.

Despite delays, indications today were that it might be possible to hold the drawing early next week.

Small net quotas in many states are accounted for by heavy enlistments in the national guard and regular army Oregon, for instance, is given a net quota of only 717 for this reason, whereas her gross quota based upon the population estimate would be several thousand

A definite place in the waiting lists for selection to the new national army will be given every one of the millions who registered it became known today Those called first for service will have their place in line filled by other registrants in order

A separate number will not, of course be drawn for every one who registered but each number taken from the box will call for the selection of more than 1 000 men or one from each of the registration districts

Only 24 States In.

With 1,000 exemption boards not yet organized and only 24 states having completed the work of numbering serially the registration cards, indications are that the first drawing will be deferred until the week of July 23

Officials have not disclosed the plans of the drawing itself, but it is believed that numbered slips will be enclosed in capsules and drawn from a large glass vessel in Secretary Baker's offices.

RAILROAD BAR EXPORT GOODS

New York, July 14 - The railroads of the county were requested today by the government to place by telegraph an immediate embargo on goods for export mentioned in the president's proclamation except where bills of lading are accompanied by federal licenses authorized by the export council.

Washington D C., July 14—An embargo, effective immediately against all shipments intended for export of commodities named in President Wilson's recent export proclamation except when bill of lading is presented with a federal license number furnished, or authorized by the export council at Washington, was ordered today by the American Railway association's commission on car service.

"KING OF THE HEJAZ" STILL FIGHTING TURKS

London, July 13.—Although little has been heard from him recently, it developed that the "King of the Hejas" the former grand sheriff of Mecca, has been continuing his activity in Arabia. This Arab has been in revolt against the Turks since July, 1916

James Ian McPherson, parliamentary secretary to the war office, said Turkish posts between the Tafila-Main district and Akaba is now in Arab hands. The total Turkish losses in the fighting that has taken place were 700 killed and 600 prisoners.

It seems probable that the towns Tafileh and Maan, northern Arabia, are those referred to Harold Gruetzmacher Wins Ten Games Straight for Cairns Bros.

Harold Gruetzmacher, a Klemme young man, who has been with the Seven Cairns Brothers' Tent Show is rapidly coming to the front. He plays slide trombone in the band and has become an expert player on this instrument. But that is not all, he has also become their star pitcher in their baseball team. He has pitched ten games straight and has won each game for them. This is saying a great deal for Harold as the Cairns also have two other pitchers on the staff, one of whom pitched for the All Nations last season. The show is now touring in Minnesota, and will go into the Dakotas, returning to Iowa in the latter part of August when Harold will leave them and take up his work at school in the fall. We congratulate Harold on his success and wish him more success in the future.

When Sponges Are "Dead."

Sponges when brought to the surface are black and slimy, filled with water and animal matter called "gurry." Several days are required for the "gurry" to run off, when the sponges are dead. They are then squeezed out with the hands and strung on lengths of coarse twine, to be sold at auction by weight. The largest market is at Key West.

IOWA'S NEW ROAD PATROL LAW

WENT INTO EFFECT JULY 4TH

The Iowa highway patrol law, passed by the last general assembly, is the best measure for the conservation of highways ever adopted. Oftimes neglect of fills and drainage offsets all of the good accomplished by a large expenditure of money and energy. A patrolman armed with authority can obviate much of the disastrous effects of rain and floods.

The New Law

Section 1. Boards of supervisors shall cause all of the highways in their jurisdiction to be patroled as hereinafter provided, and to carry out the provisions of this act they are hereby empowered and required to appoint patrolmen for the county road system, and fix their compensation, who shall be known as county road patrolmen and who shall hold their office during the pleasure of the board so appointing them.

Section 2. The road patrolmen shall give their entire time to road work from the beginning of the road working season in the spring until its close in the fall of the year and such additional time as the board of supervisors may direct.

Section 3. Boards of supervisors shall assign, allot or parcel out to the county patrolmen such sections of road or roads as they can patrol and properly care for, and it shall be the duty of the county patrolmen to go over all the roads in their respective sections at least once each week, and said patrolmen shall make extra visits to such roads or bridges as may be reported in need of attention.

Section 4. It shall be the duty of the patrolmen herein provided to drag or cause to be dragged, after each rain and at such other times as may be necessary, all the county roads that lie within their respective sections, and to remove all trash, debris or other impediments from the entrance to sluices, culverts and bridges and keep the same and their outlets open and free from obstructions. They shall keep the side ditches

BIG METEOR FOUND

Passed Over Dows In a Glare of Light That Was Seen For Miles

The meteor which passed over Dows on the night of May 31st has been the topic of much discussion all over the state. This meteor lit up several states and the explosion was heard by many of our local people. Part of this meteor was found four miles north of Battle Creek, Ida county recently. When specimens were shown the news of finding the meteor spread rapidly, and soon many prominent citizens joined in bringing the fragments to town. This specimen was in several pieces, apparently having broken in the process of cooling. The larger piece weighed seventy-four pounds. A specimen of the meteor will be analyzed, while L. N. Ligier, the finder, will place the balance on exhibition—Dows Advocate.

A SURPRISE

The Young People's Class of the English M. E. Sunday School gave Mr. and Mrs. Roy Schaefer a real surprise last Wednesday evening.

The plans were all well organized and just at 8:30 o'clock seven auto loads rolled up to their beautiful home "konking their konks and blowing their whistles." Roy and Cora were dumfounded for a little while, but soon recovered and made every one feel welcome and at home.

The meeting opened with songs and prayer, followed by the regular business session. The entertaining committee then took charge and a very pleasant evening was spent at games, closing the program with refreshments.

The Win One Class, of which Cora is a member, presented the happy couple with a beautiful Indian rug as a token of their love for their classmate.

There were fifty-one present and at the parting hour all lined up and filed by the bride and groom, giving them the grip of good luck and happiness.

We hope to enjoy another evening with Mr. and Mrs. Schaefer some time.

MISSOURI IS WATCHING IOWA

The leading farmers and other business men of northeastern Missouri are going to make an automobile tour through Iowa during the week of August 12th. The Greater Iowa Association is co-operating with the Northeast Missouri Agricultural Association to make this trip successful.

It seems that the farmers in Missouri have been reading some of the booster literature and publicity matter sent out by the Greater Iowa Association and have decided that the best thing they can do is to take a trip up this way and look things over. They are especially interested in dairying and have indicated an intention of visiting that part of Iowa in which dairying has been given particular attention.

Route of Trip

Twenty-five counties of Missouri will be represented in the touring party. The tentative route as made up by the Missouri farmers is by way of Keokuk, Mt. Pleasant, Wapello, Muscatine, Davenport, Cedar Rapids, Waterloo, Cedar Falls, Waverly, Iowa Falls, Ames, Des Moines, Oskaloosa, Ottumwa and Bloomfield.

Posters, circulars and extensive publicity are being sent broadcast through those twenty-five northeastern Missouri counties urging everybody to join the tour.

Want to Know How

"The object of the trip," says one of these circulars, "is to see how Iowa farmers conduct their business, especially in dairying, thinking some of their methods might be profitably incorporated in the development of northeast Missouri. The successful man in any business is the one who can and will make use of the experience of others who have been successful,—who has the courage to discard his own inefficient ways when he has discovered something more efficient somewhere else."

The Greater Iowa Association is arranging to have its members at the various points to be visited, act as loyal reception committees and see that the visitors are given every facility for inspecting the industries in which they are interested.

PAYING TRIBUTE TO FRENCH SCIENTISTS

Thirteen Iowa school men, three from Grinnell college, one from the state college, and nine from the State University, are represented among the sponsors for an elaborate book on "Science and Learning in France," which is just off the press. The mission of the book, as set out in the preface, is "to pay homage to French science."

"Let the scholars of France know that their American colleagues are eager to pay their tribute," the editor says. "The great place of France in the world of knowledge—the place that it always has held and always will hold—can never be forgotten by their debtors on this side of the ocean."

DR. R. M. THOMAS RECEIVES ORDERS FOR IMMEDIATE SERVICE ABROAD

Dr. R. M. Thomas, Veterinarian, received orders from headquarters last week to leave as soon as possible for Hoboken, N. Y., from which point he will embark for service abroad. Dr. Thomas received his commission some time ago, with the rank of Lieutenant. His many friends hate to see him leave but their best wishes go with him for a safe journey and that he will join us again soon. We wish him a lot of luck and that he may be greatly benefited by his experience abroad.

Last Saturday evening two Fords and an Overland which were parked on Main street were badly cut up by vandals. The upholstering, top and tires were slashed with a knife or other sharp instrument and costly damage perpetrated in each instance. This could hardly have been done by thoughtless boys for, regardless of their age, they would know better. It is a matter which should be investigated by the authorities and the guilty parties should not be allowed to escape without severe punishment. —Ringsted Dispatch.

Flies are More Dangerous Than You Think

Flies breed so fast it is difficult to stamp them out. But, at least, we can keep them out of our houses.

And we ought to keep them out—not only for our comfort, but for our health. Many people don't realize what great disease-carriers flies are. They often come laden with disease germs directly to our food.

Screen the house and porches well and you prevent disease. Also you add to your comfort and peace of mind.

It does not cost much to screen a house. Let us screen your house.

An alluring prospect for office seekers is held out in the announcement that a new government department, with only 14 officials has received a government grant of £1,000,000 in a lump sum, together with a promise of a yearly grant of at least £40,000 more The new department bears the imposing title "Bureau for Assisting Scientific Research Into Industrial Problems." The 14 officials will have a pay roll of £7,250, and the rest of the money is to be spent in assisting associations and individuals engaged in research work to carry their investigations to a successful conclusion.

Premier Paolo Boselli is regarded as a good example of the way the war has speeded up the working powers of men, even in Italy's subtropical climate. Senor Boselli, despite his nearly four-score years, begins work at 6 o'clock in the morning, three hours before the arrival of the regular clerks, and he quits work when he is done, usually between 6 and 7 o'clock in the evening If parliament is sitting, he generally is found there until the close of the session, about 8 o'clock, his ready wit and unfailing good humor making his presence necessary to prevent too violent attacks on the government.

Cavalry horses have been dying in large numbers from a mysterious disease in different regions of the south of France The mortality has reached 50 per cent to 70 per cent of new contingents arriving at Toulouse, Albi, Bordeaux Narbonne and Perpignan. Horses apparently sound and well when they are unloaded from the cars die so soon after being stabled that it is impossible to treat them This situation dates from 1914, soon after the declaration of war. The mortality was greatest in the spring of 1915 and it is still alarming

Prof G Sellergren, of the Swedish Technical University has petitioned the king to appoint a committee to investigate the commercial feasibility of securing from a certain kind of Swedish peat a fiber adapted to making textiles. The corps of African military workers behind the lines in France is to be multiplied to many times its original size The experiment according to army reports, has been a brilliant success The chief fear when the first detachments of natives were sent to France was that climatic conditions would prove an obstacle particularly the rigor of the Europ an winter The mortality last winter however, was very low and the disease that was most dreaded pneumonia, hardly existed among them

Thousands of families throughout England are, in spite of the shortage of labor, keeping their usual pre-war quota of servants. There are instances of households consisting of a mother and two daughters employing a staff of nine servants. In fact, in many homes there are so many servants that they spend most of their time waiting on each other.

The psaltery was a stringed musical instrument to accompany the voice. In the prayer book version of the Psalms the Hebrew word is given as "lute." This instrument resembled the guitar, but was larger with a convex back, resembling a gourd.

The "frontlets" or "phylacteries" of the Hebrews were strips of parchment on which were written four passages of scripture. (Exodus xii, 2-10, 11-17, Deuteronomy v. 4-9:13-23 is an ink prepared for the purpose)

It is a badge of patriotism in Hungary nowadays to wear a coat with the side pocket on the right hand side, revealing that the garment has been turned so as to make it presentable, thus saving the labor and expense of a new suit. In fashionable restaurants and hotels one sees many prominent people thus attired.

BLUFFS GROCERS TO CUT DELIVERY COSTS

Getting Together in an Attempt to Eliminate Excessive Overhead.

Council Bluffs, Ia., July 21.—That the cost of delivery is seriously affecting business is freely admitted by many Council Bluffs grocery dealers, and there is said to be a prospect that they may overcome the prejudice born of sharp competition and make an attempt to reach an agreement whereby the cost may be either entirely eliminated or greatly lessened.

Some of the grocerymen are almost in despair over conditions. The rivalry over "service" has brought matters to a climax, said one merchant, who operates four motor wagons and two motorcycles in its delivery system.

"Some of our women customers, finest women in the city, are the most inconsiderate," said the grocer. "At 5:30 o'clock on Saturday one woman came in and ordered a pound of butter and when she reached home a half hour later called us over the phone and literally flayed us for our slowness. It never occurred to her to carry that pound of butter home"

A few of the highest class stores have for a long time kept one motor car which is used exclusively for hurry up orders. This, one grocer said has been the cause of much of the trouble. We have no one to blame but ourselves. We have been too quick on the trigger in regard to service, and we are now suffering" The grocer who is quoted pays almost $5,000 a year for his delivery service.

I believe the delivery system is abused in Council Bluffs more than any place in the country," said a leading grocer 'People move here from other cities and in giving an order for groceries apologize for asking to have them delivered early the next day But they soon forsake their kind ways.'

The introduction in Council Bluffs the last year of so-called basket stores which make no deliveries of orders of less than $3 has affected the other grocers, it is said, to some extent. Their expenses are so much less that they claim to be able to undersell their competitors.

Carroll, Ia., July 20.—J. B. Hungerford of the Carroll Herald said today that the rumor that the French authorities had tried to force his son, John Hungerford, into the trenches, after the volunteer ambulance service was taken over by our government, is based upon a misunderstanding of the facts. His father does not believe that such was the case. Of course the boy has had opportunity to enlist in Paris, but he was advised by cable not to do so. In the absence of definite information, the family expect him to return to America.

SUSPECT SPY PLOT TO DESTROY MINES

Numerous Caveins Believed to Be Due to Work of Alien Enemies.

Dubuque, Ia., July 21.—What is thought by some persons to be a gigantic plot on the part of German spies or sympathizers to wipe out the lead and zinc mines of this territory became apparent last night when it was learned that the Bull Moose mine No. 2, located in Wisconsin, a few miles east of this city, had caved in. Many tons of rock and earth were piled upon close to a dozen miners, imprisoned by the cave-in, fatally injuring one of them and badly injuring the others.

The blame is laid at the door of the German spy, because this is the second mine cave-in in this territory within the past four days, and both mines were the most valuable and most productive in this part of the country

Further, both mines have been regarded as perfectly safe and were regularly inspected.

After several hours of frenzied digging, rescuers reached the imprisoned men. Richard Hines, one of the victims, was rushed to this city and an operation was performed in an attempt to save his life, but he died without regaining consciousness.

The fact that the cave-in at the Royce mine, which occurred a few days ago, happened about the same time and in much the same way, only strengthene the suspicion that the blame should be put on spies or alien sympathizers.

OPEN CAMPAIGN TO MAKE STATE "DRY" PERMANENTLY

Des Moines, Ia., July 21 — A state wide campaign will be opened at once by allied temperance forces of the state in behalf of the constitutional amendment to be voted upon October 15 providing for the adoption of constitutional prohibition in Iowa.

The campaign is in charge of the Allied Temperance Committee of Iowa a union of all of the temperance organizations of the state

Special stress will be placed during the campaign upon the fact that if constitutional prohibition is adopted it will end the prohibition fight in Iowa probably for all time.

Should the amendment be adopted it will be impossible to restore saloons unless two consecutive legislatures vote to submit a repeal of the amendment to the state, and the repeal is carried in a state wide election

Even if a proposal could be submitted and carried, it would be impossible to bring back the saloon in any city of the state unless the legislature reenacted the mulct law, or some similar measure

This would require at least three consecutive legislatures in which "wet" sentiment was dominant in both branches.

MUST RAISE TROOPS FOR GUARD PURPOSES

All Those Now on Guard Duty to Be Relieved—Up to State Now.

Des Moines, Ia., July 20.—After August 1 all state troops, now in the federal service, will be withdrawn from guard duty and the protection of bridges, warehouses and other private property will be left to the state and the municipalities. Orders to this effect have been received from Major General Barry, commander of the Thirteenth Army division.

While nothing has yet been done it is possible that those national guardsmen who have not taken the federal oath will be called into the service of the state to do guard duty There are still quite a number of these troops in the state, but officers are lacking. It is probable, however, that capable officers can be found among the men of the ranks for this sort of service.

General Barry's communication means that the First Iowa regiment, now scattered on guard duty throughout the state, will be sent south with the rest of the Iowa troops, unless some of its units are assigned to guard Camp Dodge. Plans for a home guard organization will be announced as soon as government authorization is received

The order is also evidence that the entire Iowa militia will go south very shortly after August 1

A query sent out by General Barry to guard commanders of the state asking whether they preferred to train at home for 15 days or desired to be mobilized at some central point resulted in a general agreement that it would be preferable to train at home.

Accordingly, the units will be permitted to remain at their home stations until they are sent south, and will entrain directly from their local stations.

PREDICTS HIGHER PRICE FOR COAL NEXT WINTER

Des Moines, Ia., July 20.— The industrial committee of the state council of defense has given out nothing as yet concerning the probable cost of coal to the Iowa consumer, nor as to its findings on the cost of production There is little to indicate that the retail price of coal will be reduced The operators maintain that it will not be reduced but rather that the price will be higher later in the season

The public, however, is storing comparatively little coal at the present time, according to all reports There is a hope that the government or the state may be able to do something to reduce the price, and for that reason many of those who otherwise would buy their coal early are not buying

FOOD PRODUCTION IN IOWA SHOWS BIG GAIN

This Year's Crops Exceed in Value by More Than $80,000,000 Those of 1917.

Ames, Ia., July 19. — If favorable weather conditions continue from now until the crops have matured Iowa will have a heavy increase in her crops. Heavier than she has ever produced.

Iowa crops will bring $677,500,000 this year if indications do not go amiss. This will be an increase of more than $80,000,000 over last year and nearly $204,232,000 over the average for the last 10 years.

Live stock, dairy, poultry and honey production of the state are taken into consideration.

Add to this some 40,000,000 quarts of canned stuff worth $10,000,000 as the bit donated by the Iowa housewives, which is really a war food contribution, since it releases other food for export and this gives a fair idea of the state's food production activity.

Iowa's largest increase this year will come in corn, oats, potatoes and garden crops. Under favorable weather conditions she should produce 400,000,000 bushels of corn or an increase of 54,000,000 bushels over last year, 200,000,000 bushels of oats and 10,000,000 bushels of potatoes. There will be a decrease in winter wheat, hay and alfalfa crops.

The acreage of corn planted this year is 10,242,000 or 1,048,000 more than last year The condition of the crop is 2 per cent better than July 1 last year. So, with favorable weather conditions a 400,000,000 bushels crops is assured.

Conditions and prospects are favorable for a bumper crop of oats. Rust is practically absent this year, say Ames authorities, and at present the oat crop stands 8 per cent above that of last year With an increased acreage of 169,000 acreas this means at least a 200,000,000 bushels of oats and 10,000,000 bushels of potatoes.

Potatoes and garden crops will probably show the heaviest increase. Reports. Reaching here today indicate the potato crop has increased at least 11,000 acres over last year An increase of more than 3,000,000 bushels over last year is almost assured Present indications are that the "spuds" crop this year will run about the 10,000,000 mark.

An increase of 300 per cent in garden acreage is indicated throughout the state in reports gathered by the Iowa State college experts here.

Present indications are that Iowa farmers will put up at least 1,000,000,000 additional pounds of silage. This is made possible by the 5,000 new silos erected in the state during the summer. Practically 30 per cent of the feeding value of the corn crop is lost if it is allowed to stand in the fields. This means that 30 per cent of the 1,000,000,000 pounds will be gain. The silage this year will carry at least 1,000,000 head of beef cattle through a 100-day feeding period

An increased crop of spring wheat, rye flax and fruit also is looked for, but the feather man must do his share He must hand out the best weather he has in stock The crop of summer and fall apples will be heavy. The extension service officials say the winter crop will be normal The fruit crop as it stood today is 1 per cent better than it was at the same time last year The small fruit crop will be short about 20 per cent and the apple crop that per cent

DEMANDS FREE SPEECH.

Philadelphia, July 20.—Speaking on the subject of censorship of war news, before the chamber of commerce here today, Louis Wiley, business manager of the New York Times, said it was absolutely necessary that the country retain its free speech and free press. He declared that at a crisis when mass-opinion must dictate ultimate judgements, any restriction which would withhold essential information and enlightenment from all the people could be neither wise nor patriotic.

AMERICANS MAY CONTROL GREAT MINES OF RUSSIA

Petrograd—A special mining commission of the ministry of trade has decided to recommend the transfer to American hands of a great part of the empire's mines and other mineral deposits. The commission has decided to speed up its proceedings in order to reach a decision during the stay of Elihu Root, head of the American mission, and also in view of the pending departure to America of Russian mining experts, who will join the party of Ambassador Bakhmetieff.

Two-passenger airplanes are now for sale at $3,000 each. It is said that the manufacturers expect to sell 2,000 machines within the year.

WE ARE COMING, FATHER WILSON.

PART OF RUSSIAN TROOPS LAY DOWN: GERMANS GAIN

Berlin, July 21.—(via London)—German troops have pushed forward through three strong Russian zones of defense between the Sereth and Zlota Lipa rivers in eastern Galicia, the war office announced today The Russians suffered heavily, the statement adds, and are retreating in disorder. The Germans took a few thousand prisoners.

Petrograd, July 20.—The Russian failure to hold the Germans in eastern Galicia, says an official statement by the war department today was due to extremist detachments holding meetings and discussing the advisability of obeying orders which some regiments had refused to obey

The Russian statement says the Six Hundred Seventh Mlynov regiment situated between Batkov and Manajov voluntarily retired before the attacking Germans and as a result the neighboring uints also had to retire.

GUN FIRE INCREASES.

Berlin, July 20.—(via London)—Artillery activity in Flanders increased yesterday to extreme violence, the German war office announced today.

Part of the French positions on the Winterburg were captured by the Germans. Later some of these trenches were abandoned during a French attack.

QUIET IN PETROGRAD.

Washington, July 20.—Complete quiet has been restored in Petrograd and plans for the reconstruction of the cabinet on the same basis of party representation as before the crisis are now under way, according to semi-official dispatches today.

Overalls More Modest Than Low Neck Dresses, By Heck!

And Cedar Rapids Chief of Police Refuses, Absolutely Refuses, to Interfere Wtih Girls Wearing 'Em — Prudes Are Given Severe Rebuke.

Cedar Rapids, Ia., July 21.—They may be wearing 'em higher in Hawaii than in Cedar Rapids—but not much. They may be wearing 'em lower in South Africa—but if they are they should be ashamed of themselves. Anyhow, Chief of Police Morrison does not intend to arrest girls who wear overalls in public as long as the low cuts and high cuts go unmolested.

Yesterday a scandalized citizen, a prude, complained to Chief Morrison because, forsooth, he had seen members of the fair sex walking the streets of Cedar Rapids clad in overalls, or overallets, or whatever it is they call 'em. He demanded that a censorship be established forthwith.

Nothing doing! So said the chief. Now, Chief Morrison does not pose as the champion of the working girl, but he made it plain to that benighted prude that he is no dress censor. Moreover, if the girls want to wear overalls they can do so any old time and on all occasions for all he cares.

They're doing it in Europe, so why not here, he reasoned.

But the chief didn't stop there. Oh, gosh no! The chief is a modest sort of man and he went on record as declaring that, in his humble opinion, overalls are a blame sight more modest than the gowns, low at the top and short at the bottom—and somewhat filmy in between—that some of the correct dressers are wearing.

And the chief, modest man though he is, said he didn't intend to interfere with those either. If Dame Fashion dictates low cuts and high cuts, far be it from the chief to interfere. But he wants it distinctly understood that he entertains mental reservations on the subject. Hence his decision in regard to overalls.

And all the commotion was caused by the appearance of a few women, workers in factories, mills and laundries, who have taken to the overall costume because of the greater convenience, adventuring forth at noon to buy a lunch. None of them have been parading the streets just to attract attention.

Chief Morrison has stated that none of his officers will be ordered to make any arrests of feminine wearers of overalls.

MAY TAKE COAL MINES OF IOWA

Harding Says State Will Seize and Operate Them if Possible Unless Prices Are Cut.

Des Moines, Ia., July 21.—Governor Harding in an impassioned speech at the conference of the councils of defense of state and counties here today declared that any man who allows his greed to possess him in times of war deserves only the rope and a telephone pole.

He further stated that if it is necessary and possible that the state would take charge of coal and deliver it at reasonable prices, if not possible to get fair prices otherwise.

The meeting was characterized by patriotism and service.

Colonel French, of Davenport, made a partial report on the coal investigation, but said it had not gone far enough yet for complete report.

Need Officers For New Ships.

As a stimulus to recruiting men to command the new marchant marine fleet, the shipping board has announced that "the current wages are about $250 a month for mates and $350 for captains."

To train the 10,000 officers needed for the 1,250 vessels recently contracted for, the board announces that 15 schools have been opened at various seaports. A two-months' course in technical instruction will be provided. This will be followed by practice work side by side with regular officers. It is pointed out by the board that a good foundation knowledge of things nautical, although not specifically required, will prove of material assistance to the applicant in completing the course successfully.

REICHSTAG ASKS PEACE; DEFI HURLED

"No Indemnities, No Annexations" Resolution Gets Big Vote as Michaelis Sides With War Party.

Amsterdam, July 21.—"The Germans will not make another peace offer. The peace desired to conclude is that of a visitor and it is the allies who must hereafter make overtures to end the war."

This was the challenge flung to the world by Chancellor George Michaelis, new premier of Germany, in his maiden speech delivered yesterday in the reichstag.

Dispatches from Berlin today indicated the chancellor of the empire is a militarist to the core.

"We cannot again offer peace," the chancellor said. "If our enemies abandon the lust of conquest and their aims of subjugation and wish to negotiate we will listen honestly and be ready for peace. Until then we must hold out calmly, patiently and courageously."

Copenhagen, July 20.—The reichstag yesterday adopted the majority peace resolution by a vote of 214 to 116, with 17 not voting.

Don't Take U. S. Seriously.

Chancellor Michaelis in his address before the reichstag yesterday said Germany would not continue the war a day longer if it could obtain an honorable peace. America's intervention was not regarded with serious concern. The German fleet, particularly the submarines, would master the situation, he said.

Dr. Michaelis, the new imperial German chancellor, in his address to the reichstag Thursday afternoon declared his adhesion to the German submarine campaign, asserting it to be a lawful measure, justifiably adopted, adapted and for shortening the war.

Dr. Michaelis opened his reichstag speech with a hearty tribute to Dr. von Bethmann-Hollweg, the retiring imperial chancellor, whose work, he said, history would appreciate.

The chancellor declared that the war was forced upon unwilling Germany by the Russian mobilization and that the submarine war was also forced upon Germany by Great Britain's illegal blockade starvation war.

The faint hope that America at the head of the neutrals, would check Great Britain's illegality was vain, Germany's final attempt to avoid the extremity by a peace offer failed and the submarine campaign was adopted, said the chancellor.

The submarine, the speaker continued, had done all and more than had been expected and the false prophets who had predicted the end of the war at a definite time had done a disservice to the fatherland.

AMERICA'S PART IN THE WORLD WAR PAGEANT

Here's What the Germans Are Told.

Under the headlines: "Sad Breaking Down of America's War Preparations," the Vossische Zeitung publishes the following: "The American public simply takes no notice of the Liberty loan and leaves participation to the great banks and insurance companies," and also this: "Views of leading military and naval circles which oppose not only sending untrained men, but even strong expeditionary corps, are gaining the upped hand."

Here's What U. S. Already Has Done.

A flotilla of American warships under Vice Admiral Sims has been operating in British waters since May 4.

Major General Pershing, commander of the first American expeditionary force to France, and staff of 198 officers, enlisted men and attaches, are now in France. His ship was conveyed into port by American destroyers. American warships recently arrived in French waters as an escort to transports carrying grain and supplies for the American troops in France.

A hundred naval aviators, "eyes" for the destroyers, who will aid in detecting submarines and who will perform other active duties, have arrived in France under command of Lieut. Kenneth Whiting. The Lafayette escadrille of American flyers has been fighting for France since early in the war.

It is conservatively estimated that 9,000,000 men registered on June 5, under the selective draft law, of whom 625,000 will be called to the colors.

The American ambulance service and several other ambulance, hospital and surgical units composed entirely of Americans, have been at the front for varying periods. More are going constantly. Several hundred young men are driving ambulances behind the front; most of the large medical schools in this country have fully equipped hospital units on the other side. The total number of Americans in such relief work mounts into the thousands.

The government of Peru has offered a prize of $500 for the best text book teaching temperance for use in the public schools of the country. Intemperance has become a serious problem in the republic, especially in the mining regions, and it is hoped that the introduction of the teaching of temperance in the schools will have salutary effects. The texts submitted, which must be in the Spanish language, will be passed on by a jury composed of the director of public instruction, the director of the normal school for men, a member of the temperance society, and one teacher from the Lima public schools.

Alexandre Dumas never liked to be twitted on his negro origin, and he seldom failed to "come back" at the person who made so bold as to touch him upon this sensitive spot. One day, when he was strolling in the Bois de Boulogue, he was accosted by a stranger who, after the usual courtesies, proceeded straight to broach the unwonted question. "Your father, M. Dumas, was a mulatto, wasn't he?" "He was." "And your grandfather?" "A negro, sir. A negro." "And your great grandfather?" "A monkey. That, you see, is the difference between us. My genealogy commences where yours ends."

The old frame residence of H. A. Northrup at the corner of Garfield avenue and Alhambra road, Los Angeles, has been torn down. It was built in 1882 by Miss Jennie Stoneman, sister of a governor of California. It was one of the oldest landmarks in the valley, and when erected stood in the midst of a barley field.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

If you want to fight, join the army.

Bisbee, Arizona, is getting too hot to hold the I. W. W. gang.

Late reports indicate that Villa is again tearing loose in Mexico.

I. W. W's. are still numerous in Iowa. Sure, in other words he is called a tramp.

If you never had much luck drawing in a raffle now you are sure to draw a "winner" in the draft.

We bet the Kaiser is having some awful night mares during the draft in the U. S. He sees where we get his goat.

Billy Sunday recently was fined for speeding in Portland. Maybe he was chasing a candidate up the "saw dust t ail."

Don't ever tell a girl she is "cute." Young man, you are liable to get biffed. Daniel Webster says "cute" means bow-legged.

Some people think their town is too small for them to live in, generally we find that the said person is too small for the town.

Since Iowa became bone dry we do not hear so many great fish stories. Some men could not go fishing unless they had enough booze along to float a battle ship.

Iowa leads the United States in the number of automobiles according to the population. There is one car for every eleven persons. Next comes California, with one car for every thirteen persons.

Who can tell us what the price of potatoes will be this fall? Some newspapers say they will be as low as 25c a bushel, others state that they will be so high that they will be deposited in the bank for safe keeping.

Uncle Sam has something up his sleeve. What about those thousand men he has called upon to work in seclusion for eight long months, shut cff completely from the outside world to work upon some new mysterious machine of war? There is food for thought in this.

The historic old Capitol Building at Iowa City will be fire-proofed in the near future. Architects have completed plans for the work. The original appearance will not be altered. This old building was erected in 1840 and is still in a good state of preservation.

Now the older boys will have a little military sport in the home guard which will be raised from those not affected by the selective draft. This will furnish recreation and will also get you by with a good excuse when you appear before the "family exemption" board the morning after the night before, when trying to give an account of yourself.

The Buffalo Center Tribune states that they will hold a "Gravel Day" on July 23rd. The farmers and business men will volunteer labor to fix up the roads leading into the town. Now we would suggest that the Garner people get together and have a gravel day. Of all the roads in Hancock county, we believe that the road east of Garner is the worst. Klemme can be proud of the fact that good roads lead into the city.

From Clarion comes another fish story. This time it is not "the biggest one got away," but the angler brought home the specimen. The fish, if it can be called so, has the body of an eel, has a head like a fish, with the exception of having gills it has a fur band around the neck, it has four legs resembling the legs of a small aligator, measures about twenty-five inches from tip to tip. This curious creature put up quite a gamie fight, but died soon after being exposed to the air. It has been sent to a museum in New York.

They shall remove loose stones and other impediments from the beaten track of the highway, fill depressions and keep the roads free from ruts, water pockets and mud holes, and shall repair approaches to bridges and culverts and keep the said approaches smooth and free from bumps, and shall perform such other duties and comply with such rules and regulations as may be provided by the board of supervisors.

Section 5. Boards of supervisors shall provide patrolmen with such tools and equipment as are necessary to carry out the provisions of this act and said patrolmen shall receipt to the board of supervisors therefor. Said patrolmen shall give bonds for the faithful performance of their duties and for the care of tools and equipment in such sum as the board of supervisors may direct, which bond shall be approved by the board.

Alfalfa Will Grow In Iowa

Dr. Zinn is doing some real interesting experimenting in the growing of alfalfa. He has some planted near his house and last Friday he cut the third crop this season. There will be another good crop ready for cutting in August but this he says he will leave for a protection against winter weather. On another small patch he has cut two crops and is leaving the last crop grow for seed, both cuttings have been in blossom on this patch. Dr. Zinn has carried on the experiments now for about four years and has demonstrated that alfalfa can be profitably grown in Iowa. All that the soil neds is a little lime, the soil in this small patch received it's supply of lime from the masonry work of the house. Dr. Zinn says he will put in alfalfa on his farm next year and will lime the soil. There is no reason whatever why we can't make a wonderful success of alfalfa in Iowa if it is handled in the proper way. These experiments stand as the proof.

Last week the Garner Democrat got one off on Britt in reply to a sour one handed Garner by Bailey of the Tribune. Bailey would picture Garner as being quite "wet." It has been discovered that the Britt boys go to Clear Lake to quench their thirst and come to Garner to recuperate before going back to their wives at Britt. They get the drinks at Clear Lake, go to Garner to get cheese and crackers to get the taste out of their mouth, then back home to Britt to wrap up their dome in cold cloths.

Novel Use of Handkerchiefs.

With the Jacobite revolution of 1745 in England, Pelham, bethinking himself of an old device which had served the government so well in the most critical period of Anne's reign, caused to be printed on several thousand handkerchiefs portraits of those of the young pretender's adherents who had escaped and were in hiding. These portraits, sent all over the country and hung upon every blank wall, led to the capture and execution of many fugitives.

No Person Can Afford to Go Without a Vacation

It's false economy to begin saving at the cost of health:

When it comes to a vacation, the best is none too good—
—and the best doesn't mean the most expensive,
—Colorado for example.

Go where you can get the most diversion and nerve rest,
—ask any physician if that advice isn't sound,
—and Colorado admittedly offers far more diversion than any other vacation land in America,
—plus the most wonderful scenery and the widest variety of sports in the world,
—plus the far-famed, invigorating, nerve-resting Colorado air.

Soap as Germ Destroyer.

Lately medical science has been trying to find out to what degree the chemical action of soap can be depended upon as a destroyer of germs. Professor Symes, after experimenting with many varieties of soap, declares that "all soaps possess antiseptic properties in some degree, and that any germs rubbed into soap or dropped upon its surface are not capable of multiplication."

The DESTROYER

By BURTON E. STEVENSON

CHAPTER FIVE—(Continued)

He made his way at last to the Quai de Cronstadt and joined the crowd which was staring at the wreck. A barge had been moored alongside, and a heavy crane was lifting the detached debris into it and clearing the way for the searching parties. On the quay opposite the wreck, at Number Ten, was a cafe the Cafe des Voyageurs as its sign announced and to this Lepine presently crossed sat down at a table and ordered a bock

The cafe was crowded, or its situation could not have been more fortunate a steady stream of money had poured into the pockets of its proprietor ever since the disaster The shattered windows were in themselves an advertisement, and no effort had as yet been made to replace them Lepine looked about the place with interest It was not large but it had a certain air of prosperity bespeaking a good patronage even at ordinary times At the Prefecture, Lepine had made some discrete inquiries concerning the proprietor, who, he was told, had the reputation of being a decent fellow and had never been in trouble with the police Nevertheless as a friend of Crochard's Lepine would have welcomed a look at him; but the place at the moment was apparently in charge of the head waiter It was the latter himself who responded when Lepine rapped for the bock and as he paid it slipped a note into his hand Lepine opened it, under cover of his hat and found that it contained a single line

M will welcome a conference at M Delcasse's at 11

Without a word Lepine arose and followed the man who crossed the room opened a door at the farther end of it stood aside for him to pass and then gently closed it. Lepine found himself in a little room with a single window opening upon a court It was furnished with a table and three chairs, and at the table sat Crochard He motioned Lepine to a seat

I was expecting you' he said with a cold smile and I am glad you came In the presence of that good Prefet one cannot talk freely Indeed it was with the greatest difficulty that I maintained a sober countenance He was so astonished to find that you and I should be working together - that you should be able to sit in the same room without flying at each other's throats If he only knew

Is it necessary to go into that? asked Lepine

Why not? You have no reason to be ashamed of it If you have sought my aid from time to time it was because you realized that Crochard the Invincible has sources of information which are closed to the police'

I said as much to M Delcasse It was not of myself I was thinking, but of you. What if your friends knew?"

My friends? I have never betrayed my friends, as you know well Surely Lepine, you have understood that, if I assisted you, it was only because it suited me to do so'

"Yes I have understood that" assented Lepine, flushing a little at the other's tone You always had a bargain to propose What is the bargain this time?'

"There is no bargain," retorted Crochard curtly "I ask nothing'

Lepine cast at him an astonished glance

"What!" cried Crochard, his face suddenly red, "you cannot believe the truth, then? It seems incredible to you that I should love my country? Well, I do love her, and I am going to prove it by saving her!"

"Is she in need of saving?" queried Lepine, ironically.

Crochard's eyes gleamed; then, in a moment, his anger passed.

"Delcasse believes so; Lepine does not: behold the difference between a great man and a clever one," he said, and looked at Lepine with pity in his eyes.

"Well, yes," said the prefect; "I admit it; I make no claim to greatness. I perceive no danger—nor, for the matter of that, does M. Delcasse."

Crochard looked at him for a moment.

"Let me see the registration slip from the prefecture," he said, at last.

Without a word, Lepine got out his pocketbook, produced the slip and handed it to his companion.

Crochard studied it closely.

"You have, of course, remarked the German 'S,' he said, at last.

I thought so. Now the telegram which arrived too late."

Lepine passed it over obediently

Crochard read it and re-read it, a strange light in his eyes.

And now the other one," he said finally.

Lepine stared at him.

How do you know there is another one?" he demanded

Of course there is another one" retorted Crochard, impatiently "Any fool would know that'

Still staring, Lepine handed him the second sheet of tissue.

Crochard took one glance at it then he looked at his companion.

Do you mean to say, Lepine," he asked, "that, in the face of these telegrams, you remain unconvinced that you do not see the danger?'

I see no danger," repeated the prefect, doggedly.

And yet I tell you, Lepine,' said Crochard, leading forward across the table and speaking in deadliest earnest, "that the danger is desperate. You are blind to it a thing which astonishes me; M Delcasse can do nothing -his hands are tied by the red tape of his position There remains only Crochard! If I sit idle, if I fold my hands, within a month Germany will declare war and will sweep over France like a pestilence Yesterday she struck the first blow. I tremble to think what the second may be!"

"But war!" protested Lepine. Nonsense! For war there must be a cause'

A pretext will do- and a pretext can always be found. Already Germany is preparing her pretext- she had demanded equal rights with France in Morocco -a preposterous demand, and one which France can never grant What cares Germany about Morocco? Nothing! But the pretext must be ready And now, Lepine, he added, pushing back the paper, and speaking in another tone, "I will tell you why I have come to you I should prefer to work alone but in the first place, it was necessary to provide a means of access to M Delcasse in the second place, you got these papers, where I might have failed; in the third place, there are certain questions to which you can get an answer more easily than I"

"What are the questions?" asked Lepine, moved in spite of himself, by Crochard's manner.

"There are two to which I would ask you to get answers at once. The first- Does the government maintain, or has it authorized any wireless stations in the town or in the neighborhood? The second- Have the wireless operators on any of the battleships noticed any unusual interference during the past few days? How long will it take you to secure the answers to those questions -authoritative answers?'

An hour"

Crochard glanced at his watch

It is now 10 o'clock. At 11 you will arrange for a conference with M. Delcasse. There must be no one present but we three."

"M. Crochard," said Lepine, drily, "I do not like your imperatives. I am not accustomed to them"

"M Lepine," Crochard retorted, my way of speaking is my own, and I am too old to change. In this affair, it is you who work with me, not I with you Shall we go on, or shall we stop here?'

Lepine trembled with a severe inward struggle Crochard impressed and fascinated him; but his terms were humiliating

Crochard met his gaze, read what was behind it, and leaned forward again across the table.

"Lepine," he said, "have I ever failed to do a thing I promised?"

"No."

"I shall not fail this time."

What is it you promise?"

"I promise," said Crochard, and raised his right hand solemnly, as though registering an oath, "I promise to find the man who destroyed La Liberte, and to save my country!"

Lepine gazed at him for a moment, then pushed back his chair and rose to his feet. The patriot in him had triumphed.

"Where shall the conference with M. Delcasse take place?" he asked.

Crochard smiled at the question and at the little man's impassive face.

"Lepine," he said, "on my word,' you touch greatness sometimes, and I find myself admiring you! Let the conference take place at M. Delcasse's apartment. Oh, yes; you will have a closed carriage waiting at the private entrance."

"At 11 o'clock," agreed Lepine.

"At 11 o'clock," repeated Crochard, and waved his adieu. Then, as the door closed behind that erect little figure, he sank back into his seat with a chuckle and touched a bell.

An inner door, concealed so cleverly in the wall that even Lepine's sharp eyes had not perceived it, opened and a man looked in.

"He has gone," Crochard said. "Bring some wine, Samson, and two glasses."

The door closed, but opened again in a moment to admit the man, with bottle and glasses. He placed them on the table, went back to make sure that the door was closed, and then sat down opposite Crochard. Why he should be called Samson, unless in derision, was hard to understand, for he was a mere skeleton of a man, with a face like parchment. But the brow was high and the eyes bright and the mouth as tender as a woman's.

Crochard glanced at the label on the cobwebbed bottle, and nodded as he filled his glass.

"You are good to your friends, Samson," he said. "Your health!"

"Yours'" said Samson, and drained his glass. "Everything I have is yours, my master; you know that!"

"Even your life?"

"You have only to ask it."

Crochard looked at him with smiling eyes.

"I believe you, my friend," he said. "Some day I may have to ask it—but not yet. Did you see the man who just left me?"

"It was M. Lepine," said Samson, quietly.

"Did he see you?"

"No; but if he had, it would make no difference. He would not know me now."

"Perhaps not," Crochard agreed, and glanced at the other's wasted face. "And yet he has sharp eyes and a wonderful memory"

"I will keep out of his way, said Samson.

"At worst, it is only a question of another rescue; but avoid him if you can You have a good station here, the business pays; you can lead a quiet life—and, from time to time, be of use to me."

"The last is the most important," said Samson, and filled his glass again.

"Have you learned anything more of the white haired man?"

"No; but I will know more before evening."

"I wish especially to find his lodging. If he is no longer there, I must know when he departed and where he went."

"All that you shall know; I will see to it."

"No detail is too unimportant"

"I shall remember."

"And perhaps," added Crochard, "if things go well—for this is an affair of great importance, where for once I am working on the side of the law—I shall be able to secure for you that for which you have longed — pardon from the state, rehabilitation, so that you can resume your own name and live again openly with your family. That is worth working for, it is not?"

"Ah!" cried Samson, his voice quivering with emotion. "If you could do that! But it is impossible!"

"It is not impossible!" said Crochard, and struck the table with his open hand. "I promise it!"

Samson stared at him, his lips working, and two large tears formed slowly in the corners of his eyes, brimmed over and ran down his cheeks. If Crochard said "I promise it!" the thing was as good as done. Suddenly he sat upright and brushed the tears away.

"What is it I must do?" he asked. "Tell me!"

And Crochard, drawing his chair closer, began his rapid instructions.

CHAPTER VI.

THE MYSTERIOUS SIGNALS.

M. Delcasse was a busy man, that morning, and he snorted with derision when Lepine, having secured admission for a moment, told him of Crochard's request for an audience at 11 o'clock.

"Impossible!" he said. "The board of inquiry is to convene at that hour, and I must be present to address them."

"Perhaps it would be possible to adjourn the meeting until afternoon," Lepine suggested.

Delcasse stared at him in astonishment.

"Possible, yes," he said; "most things are possible. But do you know what it is you are proposing?"

"I am proposing," said Lepine boldly, 'that you permit nothing to interfere with the conference which Crochard requests."

But Crochard—who is Crochard that I should disturb all my arrangements for him?"

"I will tell you who he is sir" said Lepine, gently; "he is the man whom, next to yourself, I consider the most remarkable in France."

Delcasse softened. The compliment was, perhaps not delicate, but it was at least deserved.

You believe that?" he said.

Yes, I do believe it I must tell you more of Crochard, some day Beside him, I am a mere bungler -I realize it more deeply each time I meet him And I assure you that I am not one to underestimate myself'

Delcasse looked at him with a little smile

It seems to me that your note has changed he said This morning

I [illegible] and since then [illegible] simply

And [illegible] earnest about this [illegible]

In [illegible] sir So is Crochard

Delcasse pondered a moment

You may bring him here at 7 o'clock tonight," he said, finally. "That is the first moment I have at leisure

It will not do, M Delcasse," said Lepine, firmly. "The other inquiry must wait It is not that inquiry which is important, it is this one'

Again the minister stared

But it seems to me that you are telling me what I must do, he said Explain yourself"

Your official inquiry," answered Lepine boldly, "for all the famous men who take part in it, will discover nothing—it will be like that other inquiry into the affair of the Jena"

And what will yours discover,"

"It is not mine -it is Crochard's, Lepine corrected. "It is he who is in command And it seems to me that he has already made a beginning I am convinced that he has something more to tell us He has charged me to secure answers to two questions"

What are they?"

'Whether there are any wireless stations in the town, or in the neighborhood and whether there has recently been any peculiar interference with the working of the instruments on our battleships"

"Ah!" said Delcasse, whose expression had changed from irritation to one of absorbed attention "So he has thought of that, also!" and he fell into a moment's revery "Very well, Lepine," he added "I believe that you are right I will arrange for the president to open the sitting, and I will summon the man who can answer the questions."

He rang for his secretary, and Lepine hastened away to secure the closed carriage He smiled to himself as he did so How incredulous Pigot and all the rest would be should they ever hear that their chief had obeyed blindly the instructions of The Invincible, and that the first minister of France had altered his plans in accordance with them!

The carriage engaged and one of his own men placed in charge of it, Lepine took his station at the principal entrance, to watch the crowd until Crochard should appear. The corridors were thronged with people hurrying in and out Lepine knew many of them, for a whole staf had been brought from Paris to carry on the business of the state, and more than one august individual paused for a word with him. But to their questions he could only respond by a shake of the head.

At the stroke of 11, Crochard mounted the steps to the door, and, at a nod from the prefect, followed him up the stairs into the anteroom of Delcasse's suite. An attendant, who was evidently on the watch for them, showed them at once into the minister's private office He was deep in correspondence, but he instantly pushed it to one side and dismissed his secretary.

"Well, M. Crochard," he said, "Lepine tells me you have more news for us. Be seated. What is the news?"

UNCLE WIGGILY AND THE NEEDLES.

"I am sorry to trouble you, Uncle Wiggily," said Nurse Jane Fuzzy Wuzzy, the muskrat lady, one morning Wuzzy, the muskrat lady, one morning as she went to where the bunny rabbit gentleman was sitting on the porch of his hollow stump bungalow, "but I would like—"

"No trouble at all, I do assure you," said Uncle Wiggily quickly. "I'll do anything you ask."

"Better wait and hear what I am going to ask," said Miss Fuzzy Wuzzy, as she tied her tail in a double bow knot, so she would not step on it while she was washing the dishes. "I fear you will not want to do me this favor."

"Just name it and see if I won't," laughed the bunny

"Well, then, I'd like you to go to the 5 and 6 cent store for me and get a paper of needles," said Nurse Jane. "I must mend some of your socks and I can't do it without a needle. Now are you sorry you promised before you know what I was going to ask?"

Uncle Wiggily made a funny face and wrinkled up his pink, twinkling nose so that it looked like a squeezed rubber ball playing jack straws,

"Never mind whether I like it or not," he said. "I'll go there for you, Nurse Jane," and then, brave rabbit gentleman that he was, off started Uncle Wiggily for the 5 and 10-cent store to get the needles for Nurse Jane. She could not go herself, as she had the bungalow work to do.

"But if there is one thing worse than another that I do not like to do it is to go to the 5 and 6 cent store, where so many little mousie girls wait on you," thought Uncle Wiggily "They look at my tall silk hat, at my red, white and blue striped rheumatism crutch, at my long ears and pink twinkling nose and then they giggle. I do not like giggling mousie girls, though other girls are very nice.

"Still a promise is a promise, so I must go and get Nurse Jane's needles. I guess I'll put on my glasses, so I'll look old and dignified like, and then maybe they won't giggle."

So Uncle Wiggily, trying to look very sedate and like a school teacher giving his class an examination in how to make the dishes keep from sliding off the multiplication table, went to the 5 and 6 cent needle store.

And, surely enough, the mousie girl clerks did giggle, and the bunny gentleman was so flerkostrated that he asked for a paper of pins at first, and a newspaper secondly, and not until a mousie girl cried "Ouch!" when a kittiecat girl made believe scratch her with her claws, did the rabbit gentleman think of what he wanted—needles.

When the mousie cried "Ouch!" it reminded him of some one sticking a thorn in a toy balloon, and that's how he remembered needles.

His ears grew very red and his pink nose twinkled very fast when he was waiting for his change, but at last everything was all right and away he started with the needles.

"My! But I'm glad to get out of that!" thought the bunny uncle. "It's worse than going to the dentist's!"

Through the woods and over the fields he hopped, on his way back to the hollow stump bungalow, and he had not gone very far before he heard a voice crying

"Oh, dear! Such trouble as I'm in! Oh, will no one help me?"

"Ha! Of course, I'll help you!" cried Uncle Wiggily in his most jolly voice. "In trouble, eh? That's what I like—to help folks out of it!"

With that he looked around and saw a beautiful red butterfly caught in some sticky gum on a pine tree.

The poor butterfly was flittering her wings, trying to get loose, but her legs were caught in the sticky stuff.

"There you are!" cried Uncle Wiggily, as with one of the needles from the paper he had bought in the five and six cent store he loosed the butterfly's legs, without hurting her and set her free

"Oh, how kind you are!" she whispered "Some day I hope I may help you Thank you!" And she flew away before the bunny could say it did not matter, that the pleasure was all his, or something like that.

Well, Uncle Wiggily went on and on, and pretty soon he was almost at his hollow stump bungalow, and he was wondering what Nurse Jane would have for dinner—carrot shortcake, maybe, or a lettuce pie, or something like that, and Uncle Wiggily was wondering why it was that his socks wore into holes and where the holes went, when Nurse Jane mended them, and all things like that, when, all of a sudden, as he put his hand in his pocket, he cried

"Oh, my, goodness me, sakes alive, and some horse radish ice cream! I've lost the paper of needles!"

He looked in all his pockets, and even in his tall silk hat, but it was of no use—the needles were gone!

"I must have dropped them by the pine tree when I took one out to help the poor butterfly," thought the bunny uncle. "Well, I must go right back and look. Nurse Jane wants those needles very much!"

So back he hopped to the pine tree, but the paper of needles was not to be found. Perhaps a tailor bird picked them up to use in sewing her nest.

"Oh, this is too bad!" cried Uncle Wiggily. "It is quite too bad!"

"What is?" asked a voice, and it was the pine tree speaking.

"I have lost Nurse Jane's paper of needles," said the bunny uncle. "I had them here when I was helping poor butterfly, and now they're gone. I just can't bear to go back to the five and six cent store with the giggling mousie girl clerks and yet——"

"There is no need to," said the pine tree. "I have more needles than I can ever use. Take as many as you like. I saw how kind you were to the butterfly, who was caught in my sticky gum, though it was not my fault. Now I will do a kindness to you."

Then the pine tree shook down a lot of pine needles, and when Uncle Wiggily took them home Nurse Jane said they were the best she ever had. So the bunny did not have to go back to the store to be giggled at. And if the pin cushion doesn't tickle the pepper caster and make the bread go down in the salt cellar to sneeze I'll tell you next of Uncle Wiggily and the swing.

Name Cars for Women.

From the Philadelphia North American.

The names of some of the Chicago grandes dames are familiar to the fighters on the French battle line because of the ambulance which bear their names. One given by Arthur Meeker is inscribed Grace Mary Meeker, in honor of his wife. Lawrence Armour has given another which carries his wife's name into the thick of the fight. The honored name of Mme. Cyrus McCormick was on one of the first ambulances to be sent from Chicago to France.

The vivid association of American names among a far away people is evidenced by the tale of the American newspaper man named McCormick, who landed in Vladivostok on his way to study the war in Russia. He's no kin to the Chicago McCormicks. As he gave his name to an official on arrival a bystander rushed up and kneeling, kissed the hem of his coat, being under the impression that he was thus paying homage to the inventor and purveyor of the great reaper.

Might Happen Again.

Mrs. Euphemia Johnson was attended by a confidential colored friend of her own sex when the railroad company called her in to effect a cash settlement for the death of her husband killed on his honeymoon

Mrs. Johnson had clouded her features with a heavy veil up to the time the corporation attorney had mentioned the sum, but when he produced the bills she threw back the badge of mourning and gazed eagerly on the bundle that flashed green and yellow in thick streaks.

The lawyer withdrew after the signing of the release and the two were left alone.

"Euphemia," said the company man, "I suppose you'll be gettin' married again, now that you're so rich"

Euphemia paused with a finger thumb half-way to her mouth for moisture and reflection

"Ef Ah do,' she observed before resuming the counting of the bills, "it'll be some pusson on de Seashore Ayeh Line."

"Skidding Jane."

A certain distinguished and fearless member of the cabinet applied for the use of a government motorcar the other day to use on "business of national importance," as the phrase goes. He was sent a car driven by a very smart and attractive looking chauffeuse, says the London Chronicle. About four or five hours later his lordship appeared in a towering rage and asked what they mean by sending him a woman who drove in a most reckless manner, endangering his life from the moment he got into his car.

"Oh, they must have sent you 'Skidding Jane!'" said the officer in charge nonchalantly.

All the Same to Him.

"Going down to hear that virtuoso at the opera house tonight?" asked the suburbanite of a neighbor

"What's that?" replied the old man

"Why, a celebrated violinist is going to play tonight."

"Naw, I'm not going. My boy plays one of them."

"Yes, but this man is celebrated."

"Oh, well, what's the difference? Fiddlin' is fiddlin' ain't it?"

Going to Land Him.

"He was engaged three times before he proposed to her."

"Yes."

"And she accepted him?"

"Yes, but she's insisting on an immediate marriage. Profiting by the experience of the other girls she isn't going to take any chance on his breaking other engagement."

Wilson Asks Same Price For Public As Government: No Patriotism In Profits

Washington, D. C. (special).—President Wilson appealed to the country's business interests last night to put aside every selfish consideration and to give their aid to the nation as freely as those who go out to offer their lives on the battlefield.

In a statement addressed to the great operators and manufacturers he gave assurances that just prices will be paid by the government and the public during the war, but warned that no attempt to extort unusual profits will be tolerated.

The statement follows:

My Fellow Countrymen: The government is about to attempt to determine the prices at which certain products shall be sold, and to set forth the circumstances under which they are necessary for the purposes of the war and certain materials which will be needed in the industries which the war must be sustained. We shall, of course, try to determine these prices and to the best of our judgment as a whole, but particular prices as a whole are difficult matter.

Promises Just Price.

A just price must of course be a price everything to the government, but just price I mean a price which will attain the object in view, a price which those who control them will be willing to pay good wages and make profits, but no exploitation of their ability to take advantage of the circumstances from time to time, because of the stupendous and staking the existence of the country.

But I trust it will be clear to every one the matter with a view to the government. Farmers are our partners in this war, as much as nothing to do with the production of this Patriotism and fair dealing must be the present circumstances be maintained together. It is proper to discuss profits as a matter of business with a view to ascertaining the proper rate of capital and the proper rate of labor in these trades, but the discussion of the profits of free men engaged in the business itself trembles on the verge of impropriety. It would be absurd to discuss them as a motive for helping to conserve and save the country.

Raps Profiteering.

I hear it suggested that more than a just price must be paid, that we must pay necessary to pay in order to get the labor and materials we want. Profiteering must be stopped. We shall, of course, try to determine these prices and to the best of our judgment as a whole, but particular prices as a whole are difficult matter. [illegible] than to arrive [illegible] considerations [illegible] steadily in mind [illegible] justice [illegible] take the [illegible] my own [illegible] principles [illegible] government and [illegible] and [illegible] difficult matter.

Promises Just Price.

A just price must of course be a price everything to the government, but just price I mean a price which will attain the object in view, a price which those who control them will be willing to pay good wages and make profits, but no exploitation of their ability to take advantage of the circumstances from time to time, because of the stupendous and staking the existence of the country.

Public Entitled to Fairness.

And there is something more that we must add to our thinking. The public is now as much part of the government as are the army and navy themselves; the whole people in all their activities are now mobilized and in service for the accomplishment of the nation's task in this war. It is in such circumstances impossibly justly to distinguish between [illegible] and individual purchases by the managers of industries and it is just as much our duty to sustain the industrials of the country with all the industries that contribute to its life as it is to sustain our forces in the field and on the sea. We must make prices to the public the same as the prices to the government. Prices mean the same thing everywhere now. They mean the efficiency of the selfishness of the nation, whether it is the government that buys them or not. They mean victory or defeat. They mean that America will win her place once for all among the foremost nations of the world or that she will sink to defeat and be one a second rate power alike in thought and in action. This is a day of reckoning and every man amongst us must personally face that reckoning and settle with her.

The case needs no arguing. I summon you to what puts a great privilege a service. I ask in your distinction. I shall expect every man who is not a slacker to be with me, and throughout this great struggle to see to it that no man can win honor who has forfeited honor for himself.

How Coal Barons Work.

From the Coal Trade Investment News: On the day following the Waldorf conference of Pennsylvania coal mine operators January 4 last W. B. J. Zimmerman, secretary of the Smokeless Coal Operators' association, told the jury trying these men and their companies for conspiracy and violation of the Sherman anti-trust law that he prepared for the operators a list of immediate increases agreed upon. The kinds of West Virginia coal affected and the comparative prices for each year and last as he prepared them are as follows:

	1916	1917	Increase per Ton
Run of mine tidewater	$3 60	$4 70	$1 75
Lump and egg	1 60	3 75	2.15
Slack	1 25	3 00	1 75
Run of mine connecting railroads	1 25	3 00	1 75
Lump and egg	1 70	3 75	2.05
Nut	1 45	3 50	2.05
Egg	1 25	3.00	1 75
Slack	1 15	3 00	1 85

The [illegible] right after "inside" and outside men got together and "fixed" the price coal pumped from 15 per cent to 16 per cent higher. Mr. Zimmerman, however, tried to inform the jury that [illegible] were to be put into effect because of the dire straits in which the operators found themselves."

[illegible] A 10 per [illegible] was [illegible] granted the [illegible] gone up a little [illegible] of $1.65 a [illegible] was added exactly [illegible] the average [illegible] the actual [illegible] operation of each [illegible] ton. It was [illegible] Mr. Zimmerman told the [illegible] compelled operators to increase from $1.70 to $2.15 per [illegible]

[illegible] ingeniously [illegible] committee [illegible] justify such increases are only [illegible] and other business [illegible] saved the [illegible] benefited in other [illegible] raised prices of coal [illegible] simply because it [illegible] to make easy money.

Milk at a Premium.

From the Iowa Farmer:

It is strange that right here in good [illegible] the very heart of the greatest agricultural [illegible] the world dairying is at such a low ebb that there is practically a milk famine in many sections of the state. In Muscatine milk dealers have been shipping in milk from Beloit, Wis., and other points outside the state. George H. Nichols of Estherville says there is almost a milk famine in that city. He says that dairymen have not been getting enough milk to pay expenses on account of the high price of feed and labor and as a result they had to go out of business. They lacked the courage to increase the price because the other fellow was willing to sell at a loss and use up his reserve bank account. Milk is not sold on the proper basis anyhow. The price should be regulated by quality and quality can easily be determined by tests. Some people seem to think that all milk is alike and all that is necessary is for it to be labeled "milk." They do not know that the richness of milk varies 2.40 per cent to nearly 7 per cent, and that 7 per cent butter fat is actually worth three times as much as milk testing 2.40 per cent butter fat. If milk sold according to the butter fat test all people would receive what they paid for and it would be in inducement for dairymen to improve the quality of the milk they sell, and not and inducement as it is now to increase the quantity at the expense of the quality.

Mammoth Cave Lighted.

Electric illumination of important parts of the Mammoth cave, Kentucky, is now an accomplished fact, a lighting plant having been recently installed at the edge of the rotunda which is the first main chamber of the cave. This chamber is at the end of a passageway, about 500 feet long leading in from the entrance, the passage being lighted by electric lamps strung along the walls. The rotunda itself, which is 200 or 250 feet across, with a dome roof from 60 to 75 feet above the floor, is lighted by batteries of electric lamps set in shallow reflectors, placed on poles so that the lamps themselves are unseen. From the rotunda two avenues lead off into the recesses of the vast cave, hitherto lighted only by dim smoky oil lamps and the torches of guides. In one of these avenues is what is known as the banquet hall, containing a wooden inclosure with tables and equipment for serving the banquet customary when a large convention visits the cave in a body. This hall is now lighted with 2,135 electric lamps. It is a distance of 380 yards from the entrance through the rotunda to the far end of the banquet hall, and this is the only portion lighted at present by the electric plant, while there are in all about 15 miles of passageway in the cave.

Why War Heads Rejoice.

From the Springfield, Mass., Republican:

No one needs to be told why Secretaries Daniels and Baker exhibited so much joy over the highly successful transportation of an army division to France. Had a single troop ship been torpedoed, or had anything gone amiss, the anti-Wilson press would have opened a drum fire upon these two cabinet officials that would have surpassed all the records of journalistic fury. Mr. Daniels in particular would have been demanded as a sacrifice to popular wrath. All the criticism of him for four years past would have been held to be vindicated. In his jubilation over the safe arrival of the last man and the last mule in France, Mr. Daniels was almost boyishly human. He knew what he had personally escaped. Well, it was a great exploit for the army and navy to put across.

Some Real Men.

From the Portland Oregonian.

Frenchmen are excused for "going crazy" when they see the American troops. It easily is understood how those regulars, tanned and bronzed by the campaign on the border, marched past the delighted Gauls in the swing of the stride that marks the regular army man. Over here, thousands of miles distance, it is just possible to repress a little "Whoop!" when one thinks of them.

It Sets One Up.

From the Widow.

"Is it easier to fly an airplain near the sea?" cooed the sweet young thing.

"Yes," replied the aviator thoughtfully, "you see the air is so much more bracing."

USES FOR FAMILY UMBRELLA

Mind of Woman Devises Two Ways in Which Ratstick May Be Pressed Into Service.

Two novel uses for an umbrella are told of in a recent issue of Poplar Mechanics Magazine. The mind of woman devised them both.

Picnickers desiring to go in bathing are often handicapped by the lack of convenient places to change clothes. An umbrella and some paper muslin provides a light portable tent that is practical and inexpensive for such uses. Cut the dark paper muslin into as many nine-foot lengths as there are sections of the umbrella. Sew these strips together. At each seam tie a string about a yard long and a stout cord 15 feet long to the handle to hold up the tent. For use open the umbrella, invert it and to each rib tie one end of the cord to the handle of the umbrella and suspend it from a tree or other support, weighting or tying down the other end.

A clothes dryer that can be easily carried will appeal to travelers and persons living in small quarters. An umbrella, four yards of strong wrapping twine and several small brass rings are required. Knot the rings into the twine at intervals, measuring the distance between the rib points of the umbrella, and hook the twine to the points by the rings, providing considerable drying space for small articles. Hook the umbrella handle over a suitable support or tie it carefully to the supporting pipe of a light fixture in the middle of the room, ready for the articles to be dried.

Faith.

"Bobby, have you said your prayers?"

"Oh, ma! God knows what I want. Why must I go over the same old ground night after night?"—Life.

Good deeds speak for themselves when they call for improved real estate.

It's Poor Economy to Endure a Bad Back

IN these days of rising prices, we need every ounce of strength and the ability to do a full day's work every day. The man or woman with weak kidneys is half crippled. Sore, aching kidneys; lame, stiff back, headache, dizzy spells, a dull, tired feeling and urinary disorders are daily sources of distress. You can't afford to neglect kidney weakness and make it easy for gravel, dropsy or Bright's disease to take you. Get a box of Doan's Kidney Pills today. They have helped thousands. They should help you.

Personal Reports of Real Cases

A SOUTH DAKOTA CASE.

Mrs. F. L. Mann, 100 W. Main St., Vermillion, S. D., says: "I had pains in my back and kidneys and at times I could hardly straighten up. When I went to bed the pains were still there and in the morning I felt tired and worn out. My bladder was inflamed and I kept getting worse. I lost a lot of weight and often had to go and lie down to get relief from the pain. After taking Doan's Kidney Pills a short time, I found they were helping me and continued use fixed me up in good shape."

AN IOWA CASE.

O. W. Emery, retired farmer of Decorah, Iowa, says: "My back got so painful I couldn't sleep; I had to place pillows under my back to get any rest at all. The pain was awful and it seemed as though my kidneys were being torn loose. My kidneys didn't act right and the secretions were painful in passage. From a big, strong, rugged man I lost weight until I was but a shadow of myself. Doan's Kidney Pills restored me to good health and I have had no kidney trouble since. I don't think I would be alive today if it weren't for the benefit Doan's brought me."

Man's Best Friends.

A recent issue of the Canadian Forestry Journal, published by the Canadian Forestry association, contains an interesting article on the damage wrought by insects and the increasing and successful warfare carried on against insects by birds, certain animals and reptiles.

"It has been estimated," says the Journal, "by those who give this question study and thought leading into actual statistics that, were there no friends allied by nature, in the great struggle between man and his enemy insects, that in three years there would be no life left on the earth. Vegetation would disappear first, and animal life would accompany and follow it.

Sartorial Distinction.

"You can't judge a man by his clothes."

"Not only," replied Miss Cayenne; "but the uniform helps some in distinguishing a soldier from a slacker."

"He was the hero of two wars," read the inscription of a tombstone. He had been married twice.

Where Life Is Cheap.

"You found out that there is a tremendous lot of peopel living in Kansas City, didn't you?" asked old Riley Rezzidew.

"There is a heap more of 'em living than it looks possible there could be, when you see the thousands of motor cars that go ripsnorting up and down Grand avenue," grimly replied Burt Blurt, who had just returned from the Big Burg. "And with sewers blowing up under 'em', footpads slugging 'em, people falling out of seventh-story windows on 'em, elevators dropping 'em into cellars, and all this and that, h'Jimminy, I wonder everybody that lives in Kay See six months ain't dead long before the end of that time!"—Kansas City Star.

How His Name Originated.

Mr. Lynch and his friend were discussing family names and their history.

"How did your name originate?" asked the friend.

"Oh, probably one of my ancestors was of the grasping kind that you hear about so often. Somebody gave him an 'lynch' and he took an 'L.'"—Christian Register.

Enough for Him.

The Boss—Did you call on that man Slocum, today?

The Collector—I did.

"Get anything?"

"A cigar and some advice."

"Is that all?"

"Well, if you'd got a whiff of the cigar and heard the advice, I guess you'd thought it enough."

It's easy enough to be sorry. The hard part is in not wanting to be sorry before you do it.

That Was Different.

"I want," said the grim-faced commander, "a dozen men who will give their lives to their country." The entire regiment stepped forward. The commander selected twelve.

"Now," said he, "you are to hold this position until you are wiped out."

"But we shall be killed!" quavered one.

"Did you not volunteer to give your life to your country?" asked the commander sternly.

"Oh, 'life!' I thought you said 'wife!'"

Mathematician Wanted.

"I understand some big lots of potatoes have spolled," remarked Mrs. Corntossel.

"Yep," replied Farmer Corntossel. "I'm waitin' fur our boy Josh to come home so's we can talk it over with him."

"What'll Josh know about it?"

"He has been studyin' the higher mathematics. I want him to figure out how many peelin's folks'll have to save in the kitchen to make up fur the waste of a carload of potatoes."

An Unusual Request.

Mrs. Bunny—Oh, Mr. Turtle, won't you come down to our laundry and let us use your back for a washboard?"

J. W. Waterman & Son

A party was given last Monday evening in the Princess theatre in honor of Dr. Thomas and wife. Dr. Thomas left Tuesday evening for Hoboken, N. J., from which point he will go to Europe for service as a veterinarian in the U. S. Service. A fine time is reported, there being music and dancing and also plenty to eat in the way of a fine lunch. About eighty people were present to help make this a long to be remembered event.

FOUR KILLED WHEN TRAIN STRIKES CAR

Rev. Nissen, Wife and Daughter Killed Almost Instantly, Morris Day Fatally Injured; Dies in Hospital

Rev. H. C. Nissen, wife and daughter were killed almost instantly, and Mr. Morris Day, Mrs. Nissen's father, fatally injured, dying in the hospital later; when an automobile they were riding in was struck by a C. M. & St. P. freight train on the Spencer branch at Milford, switching in the yards last Thursday night.

Walter Nissen, 14 year old son of Rev. and Mrs. Nissen, was driving the automobile, and was the only member of the party to escape, with but a few bruises and scratches. It is reported that a trainman, Conductor J. M. Hardie flagged the crossing and either Walter did not see the signal or else in some manner was unable to stop the car. We were unable to get the facts about the accident and gather this from general opinion of those better acquainted with the details of the accident.

This comes as a great shock to Klemme, as these people are well known here and were raised in this vicinity. Mr. Morris Day is the father of Mr John N. Day, one of our prominent business men.

The accident seems doubly sad because the party are so well known here. Funeral services of the Nissens were held here Saturday at the English M E church, the funeral service of Morris Day was conducted by the Masonic Lodge and was held from Klemme Monday afternoon.

On page 4 of this issue we give a later and more complete account of this accident, we also give the obituaries of the ill fated party.

Nick Reese Dead

The life of another pioneer resident of this locality terminated last Sunday shortly after noon, in the death of Mr. Nick Reese, who had been a resident of this locality for more than thirty-five years. He was seventy-six years of age at the time of his death and for the past few years his health has been none too good. His condition became alarming on last Friday night and he submitted to an operation, from the effects of which he failed to rally. Deceased was engaged in the mercantile business here until about ten years ago, being succeeded by his eldest son. He was long associated with the business interests of the town and was one of its most prominent citizens. He leaves to mourn his demise, four children, two sons and two daughters, his wife having died several years ago. Two brothers also survive him, as well as several grandchildren. Funeral services were held at the Methodist church yesterday afternoon being in charge of the pastor, Rev Buress and the members of King Solomon Lodge No. 210 A. F & A. M., of which the deceased has long been an honored and influential member Burial took place in Franklin Grove cemetery. Mr Reese has been a familiar figure upon the streets of Belmond for many years and he will be greatly missed by his numerous friends and associates. The children will miss their father and the Townsan boys their grandfather more than words can tell. To them the sympathy of this community is extended. Mr. Reese was a fine man, honorable, upright, just, his influence ever being exerted for what he believed to be for the best interests of this community in moral, educational and social circles —Belmond Herald-Press.

All Band Members please be at the Princess Theatre promptly at 8:00 o'clock this Friday evening. T. F. M.

Last week we took a trip with Dr. Zinn out to his farm east of Klemme, and noted the fine condition that this farm is in. The corn was beginning to tassel, the oats were being cut and a lot of hay had been stacked. This farm contains over four hundred acres and is all well improved. A new silo will be built and also a large barn to take care of the big herd of cattle for the winter feeding. There are many fine farms near Klemme and the farmers take a pride in having them up-to-date in every respect.

"A FACTORY ON WHEELS"

A factory on wheels is what the new machine which Chas. Gutterman & Sons have recently installed, can be called.

The machine is used for woodworking, sawing, cutting, fitting, etc. In order to give you a fair idea of the machine we will go into detail as it is well worth mentioning. The whole outfit is mounted on trucks, has a 12-inch planer and jointer for dressing lumber, a crescent, rip, band saw and swing saw which makes quick work in sawing; a boring machine, another machine makes the tenons and mortises for jointing; then there is a shaper, which is used in all mould work, such as turning out window and door sash, panels, moulding, etc., for finishing off interior work they have a sander, a wheel about 15 inches in diameter covered with sand paper and running about 3,000 revolutions a minute. This short description completes the main features of the machine; to appreciate such a machine, one must see it when running to gain a fair knowledge of the work it can do. The machine stands about 7½ feet high and occupies a floor space of 4½ x 10½, is very compact, but when running any machine can run without interfering with the other, in fact five men can work on it at the same time, all doing a different work and still not interfere with each other. It will be well worth your time to see this machine running. It can be seen at the new house which Mr. Gutterman is building for Aug. Lau.

Flies are More Dangerous Than You Think

Flies breed so fast it is difficult to stamp them out. But, at least, we can keep them out of our houses.

And we ought to keep them out — not only for our comfort, but for our health. Many people don't realize what great disease-carriers flies are. They often come laden with disease germs directly to our food.

Screen the house and porches well and you prevent disease. Also you add to your comfort and peace of mind.

It does not cost much to screen a house. Let us screen your house.

KLEMME, IOWA

Near-sightedness and far-sightedness are due respectively to lengthening and shortening of the eyeball in the line of sight, and the idea of correcting the shape of the eye artificially is not a new one, for a much exploited suction eye-cup of many years ago was designed to remedy far-sightedness by giving the organ increased length. A device lately shown to the Paris academy of medicine by Bachi and D'Ansan is intended to have the opposite effect. In this apparatus, a pair of tampons take the place of the lenses of a pair of spectacles, and are held against the eye by adjustable pressure, which is supposed to flatten out and restore elasticity and resistance to side pressure to the outer membrane, the sclerotic. In operation the pressure is applied in a dark room for one or two seconds, with rest periods of equal length, the application being continuously repeated during 10 minutes. The sittings are repeated as required, the number necessary increasing with the patient's age. Marked improvement is claimed to have followed the trials made and a man of 55 years, who could not read at a distance of more than a foot before treatment, was made capable of reading the same characters 64 inches away.

The Rheinische Westfaelische Zeitung of Essen, Germany, in a leading article headed "New Offensive Against Our Rate of Exchange," deplores the decline in the exchange rate of the mark and says: "The enemy has every interest in keeping the rate as low as possible, not only in order to increase the cost of imports into Germany during the war, but to hinder reconstruction of Germany's economic life after the war." The campaign against the rate of exchange of the mark is attributed to a large New York banking house and to the recent increase in the number of Germany's enemies, which has narrowed the scope within which Germany can take measures to improve the exchange, while the realization of securities of hostile countries in German hands is declared to be impossible.

A very marked inequality of brightness is seen in a spiral filament of tungsten incandescent lamp, and tests with a photometer have proven that the interior of the wire in a gas filled lamp really emits very nearly twice as much light as the outside. From experiments at the United States bureau of standards, W. W. Coblenz concludes that this curious difference is due to the multiple reflection of light from adjacent turns of wire. An earlier view was that a difference in temperature is the cause, but Langmuir has shown that the actual temperature difference cannot exceed five degrees centigrade, while 200 degrees would be necessary to account for the measured difference in brightness.

Special wiring of hospitals makes it practicable to distribute phonograph music to each patient. A spring motor cabinet with the usual turntable has instead of the horn a special music transmitter, which is energized by the vibrations of the needle passing over the record and the electrical vibrations are transmitted over the wires to an outlet jack near each bed. Having a head receiver with cord and plug, the patient desiring to do so, can insert the plug in the jack near him. With the receiver close to his ear he then hears the music but disturbs no other patient.

The German imperial supreme court in giving its decision at Berlin that war is no cause for dismissal from service sustained a suit brought by an employe who had been summarily dismissed in September, 1914, on the ground that war did not permit the continuance of business in foreign countries. In rejecting the ruling of the lower court, the highest tribunal declared that while war shut off intercourse with warring countries, the firm still had neutral states to operate in which made obligations to their employes binding.

Potatoes are cultivated in the tablelands in the Andes of Bolivia, at a height where cereals and most vegetables will not grow. A consular report describes a local method of drying by alternate freezings and thawings and states that the product known as "chuno" and forming one of the chief foods of the natives, can be kept unaltered for months or even years. The suggestion is added that the hardy Bolivian varieties of potato, already under trial by growers in France and Sweden, might prove valuable in the United States.

A stalagnite of copper, about three inches high by an inch in diameter and weighing about a pound, is the interesting geological puzzle lately found in the Buttermut mine, near Mayer, Ariz. It was built up from the nut of a hanging rod in the shaft, and seems to have had a growth period of four to seven years. Like seams of native copper, it is provgan by the decomposition of copper sulgan by the decomposition of copper sulphate solution by the iron, but must have continued to grow by the deposition of copper on copper.

Five and a half million people of the United States are illiterate. This figure includes only those over 10 years of age who are unable to read or to write. In making this report the bureau of education explains that this condition is due largely to the foreign elements and our limited capacity to meet their needs.

A hotel in Marblehead, Mass., has a brass dial marked with the points of the compass set in the floor of a large veranda. On this dial are marked the directions of various important cities and their distance from Marblehead. The device is said to attract much attention from visitors.

In the last week of June, 1916, a quantity of light and medium munitions was consumed by the British armies on the western front, greater than that which was produced in the whole of Great Britain during the first 11 months of the war.

It was a Harvard student, the Washington Times says, who telegraphed to President Wilson an argument for universal military service "to prevent unpatriotic fellows from landing all the choice girls while the patriotic men are serving their country."

Oil companies operating in the vicinity of Tampico have petitioned the government to be allowed to erect and operate wireless stations for conducting their business. The petition is under consideration but it is said that if it is granted, it will be on condition that the stations be under government control and manned by government operators.

FORCIBLY SEARCHED, WOMAN BRINGS SUIT

Supposed Liquor Turns Out to Be Preserves—Creston Resident Seeks Damages.

Creston, Ia., July 28.—Mrs. W. L. McCrawley, of Creston, Ia., today filed suit against the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy railroad for injuries suffered Wednesday on the train at Maryville. County Attorney Locke and the marshal of Lenox are the ones against whom her grievances are directed. She claims that Locke demanded of her that she permit him to open her suitcase in the supposed search for booze. Mrs. McCrawley refused unless County Attorney Locke could produce a warrant. He told her that it was not necessary to have one and the men together frisked the suitcases, but their efforts were rewarded by only 15 quarts of preserved fruit.

REMAINING GUARDSMEN TO JOIN HOME GUARDS

Fort Dodge, July 28.—Intimation that 600 members of the Iowa national guard not in federal service for several reasons, one of them being failure to sign the federal oath, will become members of the Iowa state home guard was made by Gov. W. L. Harding in Fort Dodge yesterday.

Governor Harding told of plans for the formation of the home guard. He declared that after organization this body for home defense would be in such mobile condition that they could be mobilized in any place or corner of the state within from 12 to 16 hours' notice.

Sixty rifle companies now in the state will also be ready to do duty in the home guard. No commissions will be given for leaders of the home guard companies. Fort Dodge will undoubtedly get one of the 24 units to be formed. The time of organization is not yet decided upon.

YOUNG KENNETH GAYNOR DROWNED AT OKOBOJI

Okoboji, Ia., July 28.—Kenneth Gaynor who was the son of Mr. and Mrs. L. R. Gaynor 1622 Sixth avenue, Des Moines, was drowned in Lake Okoboji Wednesday afternoon while attempting to rescue his companion John Scroggs of Beardsley, S. D., when both were overwhelmed by a big wave just after they had left their boat for a splash in the lake.

J. K. Leiger with whom they had been rowing swung the boat around and succeeded in picking up Scroggs who was unconscious but young Gaynor had disappeared. His body was recovered two hours later.

He motored to Okoboji a few days ago with his uncle, Judge F. R. Gaynor of the supreme court. He would have been 20 years old on the 20th of August next and was a graduate of North high.

ATTEMPT TO ROB BANK AT HOSPERS THWARTED

Hospers, Ia., July 28.—What is believed to have been an attempt to rob the Peoples Savings Bank of Hospers, Wednesday morning was foiled. George Herman the night station agent when he left the station to get a drink was forced back into the building by two men who covered him with guns. The men withdrew. Telephone wires outside Hospers were cut. It is believed the robbers finding Herman awake feared he would spread an alarm and departed. Sheriff Maxwell at LeMars, was notified. He patrolled the road leading to Sioux City but found only the tracks of an automobile that had passed through Merrill about an hour before his arrival.

LeMars, Ia., July 28.—Through the acceptance by the board of county supervisors yesterday of the federal highway aid grant assurance is given that for the next five years approximately $13,500 per annum will be spent on permanent improvements to highways.

The expenditure is to be spread over a period of five years. Plymouth county's share of the fund will be paid by the state out of the county's motor vehicle tax fund.

F. Froning at Eldora. This is believed to be the highest price ever paid for a load of corn in the county.

INVESTIGATE REPORT OF CORNER IN SPUDS

State Council of Defense Informed of Conspiracy by Commission Men..

Des Moines, Ia., July 28.—The state defense council has been asked to investigate reports that buyers of big commission houses are going from farm to farm in the potato sections of northern Iowa, endeavoring to buy up the fall crop with a view of cornering spuds. Reports to this effect have been reaching the desk of Secretary Metcalf, of the council from many sources.

Today a letter was received from Mayor Truman A. Potter, of Mason City in which he stated such reports had come to him, and suggests that an investigation be made.

Secretary Metcalf immediately wrote a letter to W. W. Marsh, of Waterloo, chairman of the agricultural committee of the council, apprising him of the situation. He will also consult with Attorney General Havner as to legal proceedings in the matter.

Food Commissioner Barney's office announces present prospects indicate a big crop of potatoes not only in Iowa but in other states. It is, therefore, considered a big undertaking for food speculators to attempt to corner the potato market. However, the commission houses will be able to buy comparatively cheap this fall and hold for high prices next spring when a large per cent of people who have not stored potatoes will be buying them, it was pointed out.

WEBSTER CITY LEADS IN OFFICERS SENT TO ARMY

Webster City, Ia., July 28.—Webster City holds a unique distinction in military circles in Iowa. There are a greater number of both commissioned and noncommissioned army officers in this city than in any other town or city in the state. Twelve commissioned officers claim Webster City as their residences and there are 52 noncommissioned officers in the three military units in the city.

Col. N. P. Hyatt, commanding the Second Iowa regiment, heads the list of commissioned officers. Maj. F. J. Lund, also of the Second, lives here. The other 10 are Capt. A. M. Martin, of C company, Capt. Harold J. Smith, of the Regimental Supply company; Lieut. E. S. Boudinot, of the Supply company, Captain Higbee, of the First Regiment Supply company, Lieut. Fred Winslow of the Headquarters company and who will soon be transferred to General Allens staff, Chaplain H. F. Shook of the Second Iowa, Lieut. G. O. Blake, now at Fort Snelling, Lieut. R. C. Crumpton of the Council Bluffs Medical corps.

SECOND IOWA REGIMENT TO LOSE BAND MASTER

Webster City, Ia., July 28.—A telegram from Washington brings the unwelcome news that Senator Kenyon has been unable to get the war department to waive the enlistment age limit to allow John P. Eppel of Boone to remain as leader of the Second Iowa regimental band in this city. General Mann refused to act, holding that the military age is fixed by law and cannot be waived. This age is 16 and Eppel is a year beyond the limit.

An unfortunate circumstance in connection with this is the fact that the members of the Eppel orchestra, all of whom are within the enlistment age enlisted in the band with the understanding that their leader would be taken. Assistant Director Charles W. Bushman will probably take the leadership. Mr. Eppel has made this band the best military band in the midwest.

CROPS HEAVILY DAMAGED BY SEVERE HAIL STORM

Rock Rapids, Ia., July 28.—A survey of the damage done to growing crops by the hail storm which passed through the eastern part of Lyon county shows that the farmers of that vicinity have sustained very heavy damage. Conservative estimators say the damage is in excess of $50,000. In some cases the fields will be a total losses. Insurance ranging from $10 to $12 per acre partly covers the loss.

IDA COUNTY FARMERS ARE AROUSED BY BOOK AGENT

Ida Grove, Ia., July 28.—The farmers in the southwestern part of Ida county became considerably worked up the first of the week over the actions of a young man who professed to be canvassing for a book treating on stock diseases, and telephoned for Sheriff McLeod to come out and get the man. When taken in hand by the sheriff he gave his name as Dwight Krumberg and his home as Fairfield, Ia. He was held until the sheriff could telephone the officials at Fairfield and then turned loose.

Krumberg's actions were peculiar as he would hang around the hog lots of the farmers, talking about a cure for cholera, and other diseases that infest the swine herds, and many of the farmers were afraid that he might poison or inoculate their herds with cholera germs.

LEO ZIEGMAN IS RELEASED UNDER BONDS OF $10,000

Sac City, Ia., July 28.—Leo Ziegman aged 16, held for shooting his father, John Ziegman, jr., on the Ziegman farm near Odebolt, has been released under $10,000 bond. Highland and bound over to the grand jury at the next term of court.

MAN, WHO SHOT HIMSELF OVER GIRL, TO RECOVER

George, Ia., July 28.—Latest reports from Luverne, Minn., where Martin Christensen was taken to a hospital following an attempt to kill himself are that Christiansen will recover. The bullet which missed his vital organs has been removed.

Christiansen's act was the result of his failure to win favor with Miss Elma Weekley. He visited her in the forenoon, was rejected, and returned in the afternoon, was again rejected and shot himself. He pulled the trigger three times before exploding a cartridge.

SINGS GERMAN HYMN AT PATRIOTIC MEET

Ida Grove Women Hastily Adjourn When One Member Makes Break.

Ida Grove, Ia., July 27.—Members of a local ladies' secret organization have been considerably worked up for several days over an incident that dampened the enthusiasm of a patriot meeting held at the home of one of its members one day last week. At first it was thought advisable to keep the incident a secret, but the patriotism of some of the members caused the leak. Toasts were being made to Uncle Sam and his soldiers, sailors and fighting men by the members, when one of them, a wife of a prominent business man, rising to make her toast, sang the national hymn of Germany. It is wholly unnecessary to state that a chill overcome the meeting it was hastily adjourned before the venom of a patriotic bunch of mothers could be sprung upon the lady who had forgotten that the kaiser and his country were enemies of this country.

FIRST FLAG IN FRANCE BORNE BY AN IOWA YOUTH

Marshalltown, Ia., July 27.—It remained for an Iowa boy, a native son of this city to bear the first American flag on the French battle front, according to word that has been received from a point in France. The boy who was accorded this honor was Roland Root Speers, son of Mr. and Mrs. I. C. Speers, formerly of this city but now of Santa Monica, Cal.

Young Speers went to France last winter with a hospital ambulance unit from Leland Stanford, jr., university. The flag was presented to the hospital unit by the Friends of France society, of San Francisco, and bore on the metal plate fastened to the slagstaff a message signed by President Wilson, and the first colors sanctioned by the government of the United States to be sent to the battle front in France. Facing 2,000 French troops drawn up in line with fixed bayonets the Stanford hospital unit marched down the line, Speers bearing the flag. The ceremony, French officers declared was the greatest honor ever shown to the American flag in France. After the war the flag is to be presented to the National Museum in Washington.

WILL GIVE BIG PICNIC FOR BOYS AT IDA GROVE

Ida Grove, Ia., July 27.—The past week has been one of patriotism in Ida Grove. IDA GROVE SENDS 39 TO MUNITIONS TRAIN

Ida Grove, Ia., July 27.—This city sent three more men to Des Moines last night to join the ammunition train corps. This gives Ida Grove the largest contingent in that military organization of any city in the state outside of Des Moines. Creston sent 37 men, and Ida Grove 36 on its special. Nearly two-thirds of the corps sent from here were members of Company B, the organization of state militia that was sent to the border a year ago to the day for a nine months military training. The roster is as follows: Henry Paulsen, Albert Parker, Howard Clark, D. J. Anderson, L. J. Boughton, J. T. Crawford, W. E. Dillon, L. A. Denison, J. L. Elser, I. P. and W. W. Irwin, K. I. Jensen, M. Jorgensen, N. O. Johnson, F. D. Kimon, H. H. Lutz, R. McCabe, W. J. Miller, J. S. Modrell, P. M. Moore, C. C. Daggard, C. W. and J. Ohlson, C. C. and D. J. O'Meara, T. H. Patton, A. S. Paulsen, C. V. TWO GUARDSMEN KILLED AND TWO BADLY INJURED

Des Moines, Ia., July 27.—Two guardsmen were killed and two were injured when their auto crashed into the iron railings surrounding the mobilization camp. Since the accident orders have been issued for slower driving on all the drives approaching the camp. However the accident was not due to reckless driving but to the fact that C. A. Wickersham, who was driving put his foot on the wrong pedal when ordered to stop at the first entrance of the camp, by the sentry.

The dead are Dale Sutherland and Clarence Swander, of Des Moines men of the hospital unit. The injured are C. A. Wickersham, of battery F, and Private Charles Adams of Mason City. They are expected to recover from their injuries.

STILL HOPE FOR RETURN OF MISSING PREACHER

Logan, Ia., July 27.—As the summer days shorten interest in the missing Rev. C. C. Payton ebbs away. During the early part of this month there was a scurrying of people in any direction word came of the presence of a man in any respect answering the description of the missing one. Now such reports fail to arouse interest.

This because Rev. Mr. Payton was once before subject to aphasia and disappeared from his home. It is believed he will regain his mental equilibrium and return to his wife. This is her belief. She is still at the Baptist parsonage and watches the mails for news of her missing husband.

LEMARS—At a meeting of the board of supervisors held here the proposed plan of forming a drainage district near Westfield, in the western part of the county, was dropped. There were several objectors to the project on the score that the proposed improvement was not necessary. This is the first attempt to establish any drainage district in Plymouth county.

SHENANDOAH—The contract for the $110,228 high school building which will be erected on the site of the Western Normal college, which was destroyed by fire, has been awarded to Getchell & Sugarman, of Des Moines.

HUGE FORCE OF MEN RUSHES CANTONMENT

Buildings Ready by September 1—Plan to Work Nights.

Des Moines, Ia., July 26.—"Camp Dodge," the official title of the thirteenth division cantonment of the new national army, will be ready September 1 for the 40,000 or more men drafted from Minnesota, the Dakotas, Nebraska and Iowa, according to the contractors in charge of construction.

Work is being pushed on the barracks and other buildings and electric lights have been strung for possible night work, if that becomes necessary. More than 2,000 civilian laborers are now engaged, and as more are to be added shortly, it is likely the total working force will be brought up to 4,000.

Camp Dodge covers a tract two and one-half miles wide and five and one-half miles long, with an artillery range extending six miles with a width of about one-half mile. Some of this land constituted the original site of Camp Dodge, the rendezvous of the Iowa national guard, but most of it has been used for farming purposes.

From a tranquil pastoral scene, the camp grounds have been transformed into a bee hive of industry. Trenches for water, lighting and sewage are being dug, camp streets laid out, buildings erected and transportation facilities to and from Des Moines improved. The camp is about six miles from the northwest edge of town, and about 11 miles from the central business and amusement district.

About the camp will be a five-mile zone under jurisdiction of the military, policed with the cooperation of city and Polk county authorities. Stringent rules to protect the morals of the soldiers will be enforced not only in this zone, but also in the city of Des Moines.

Various local and national organizations are planning amusements for the men both in camp and in the city. The local street car company has announced a fare of 10 cents for soldiers to or from Des Moines, while civilians will be required to pay 20 cents for the same service.

Camp plans call for 243 company barracks, but it is likely that many of these will not be needed until some time after the first assignment of men is called. With constructions facilities at the maximum of speed it is expected to complete the barracks at the rate of six a day.

Other buildings to be erected include from 15 to 20 supply depots, officers quarters, five or 10 airplane hangars, stables for more than 5,000 horses and mules and various other minor establishments.

A further idea of the equipment of the camp can be gained from the number of motor trucks and automobiles required, totaling at least 1,500, supplemented by scores of motorcycles. This includes the officers cars.

There will be 11 miles of paved streets within the camp, connecting with county roads and city streets which are being improved.

EDUCATIONAL CHANCE PROVIDED FOR SAMMY

Iowa Colleges Will Provide Classes for Soldiers at Camp Dodge.

Ames, Ia., July 26.—Giving Sammy a chance to go school while he learns to soldier by turning over the resources of the colleges of this section to the 40,000 soldiers at Camp Dodge, is the significant move being worked out by the engineering extension department at Iowa State college. To mobilize these resources to fill this vital need in camp life K. G. Smith, head of the department has called a conference at Iowa State college for August 4, of representatives from all educational institutions in Iowa and from the state universities of Nebraska, Minnesota, Wisconsin and North and South Dakota. Mr. William Orr, head of the educational bureau of the national war work council of the Y. M. C. A., through which this work will be given, will attend.

The aims of this extension service are to aid in building serviceable Christian character, to profitably occupy leisure time and relieve camp life monotony, supplement military instruction, prepare men for army advancement and fit them for profitable vocations after the war. The work will probably include lectures, educational motion pictures, short courses, class and correspondence instruction, debating and public speaking clubs, package and library service, camera clubs and other educational agencies.

"It must be recognized that never before has there been so high a standard of education and intelligence among soldiers as that of the men now in service in the armies of the United States," points out Mr. Smith. "Such men will respond readily to opportunities for instruction. He points out the experience of Great Britain in this line where it was found that the men in training camps demanded things more substantial than simple entertainment.

"Ultimately such instruction with all the institutions cooperating is planned to reach not only the training camps but the men on the firing line, returned soldiers, soldiers in hospitals and prisoners of war.

Plans are under way to obtain recognition from college entrance boards for standard units of work covered in class work to be offered in this extension service.

GROWING CROPS ARE IN NEED OF SOAKING RAIN

Odebolt, Ia., July 26.—The early potatoes garden vegetables and pastures in this immediate locality are suffering badly for the want of rain. The corn however, is standing the drought nicely and making good progress, but a good rain soon would do a world of good to all vegetation and growing crops. It has been almost a month now since Jupiter Pluvius paid his respects to this locality.

ROCK RAPIDS—Harvest work has commenced here, the early oats being ready to cut. These are a good crop and [illegible] in weight. Along the river, where [illegible] soil is light, the earlier oats are not heavy on the ground as are the late [illegible] fields, but will be a good crop. Corn [illegible] forging ahead at a great rate and gives promise of a bumper crop.

ODEBOLT—Odebolt furnished two members to the munitions corps which was organized at Ida Grove last week. Niles Joarston and Floyd Rex. Rex was one of the members of Company B, Iowa National Guard, that saw service on the border but refused to take the federal oath.

U. S. DOGS TO DO "BIT" IN WAR

Will Seek Wounded In "No Man's Land."

Washington, July 28. The American dog is going to do his bit in the war

Red Cross canines are in big demand on the western front Wearing gas masks, they go out between the trenches and locate unconscious wounded men in piles of dead

Several months of training is necessary before the dogs are ready for service. They must be taught to range the shell-swept areas of No Man's Land hunting the wounded whom the busy stretcher bearers could not at first glance distinguish from the dead When an unconscious man is located the dog is trained to carry his "tin hat" or shrapnel helmet to the stretcher bearers, and then to lead them back to where the sufferer is lying

EXECUTIONS BEST CHECK ON ESPIONAGE

Cooperation Between Police and Public Does Wonders, Scotland Yard Says.

London, July 12.—(by mail)—The most effective method of combatting the German espionage system in the United States is to be found in cooperation between the public generally and the police, according to opinions expressed to the Associated Press by high officials of Scotland Yard

Since the entry of the United States into the war English officials and officials of the United States department of justice, have been closely cooperating along these and other related lines and the American agents have been furnished with such information, not only in regard to persons, but in regard to, methods of catching those who are working for Berlin.

The compact wireless apparatus, easily moved about and within containers that disguise its real nature, is to be especially guarded against. Scotland Yard feels

There is a general feeling in London that the execution of the first spies caught would go far in the United States toward persuading others, Germans as well as neutrals that such work is extremely hazardous.

BLOW TO ARMIES UNITES RUSSIA BEHIND RULERS

People, Fearing for New Found Freedom, Demand Stronger Discipline to Protect Nation.

BATTLE ENDS NEW REVOLT

Soldiers, Loyal This Time, Shoot Down Extremists—Kronstadt to Be Blockaded—Women to Join Navy.

Petrograd, July 28.- Premier Kerensky is conducting a tremendous struggle to prevent the return of Russian absolutism The fact that Kerensky senses that danger of a counter revolution is indicated in two of his latest speeches

Washington, July 28. The Russian military reverses have enormously strengthened the hands of the government in Petrograd, according to a dispatch from Ambassador Francis today to the state department. They have shown the impossibility of control of the army soldiers' committee, the ambassador reports, and have led to a universal demand for stronger discipline.

The ambassador reported that the military crisis at the front has caused the deepest alarm in Petrograd, not only as to a severe military disaster, but as to the achievements of the revolution itself. All parties are united, he said in urging the governments to use any measures necessary to meet the situation.

Dispatches to the Russian embassy confirm this point of view, and show that many conservative leaders, who have recently gone out of office, are now again coming to the front of affairs. The include such men as the former president of the duma, Rodzianko; the former minister instruction, Ignatieff; leader Piekhanoff, of the social democratic party; Professor Avsenteff, socialist and Admiral Kolchak, of the Black sea fleet. This is interpreted to forecast a more representative and better experienced government.

Dictator Is Supported.

At the same time arrests among the Bolsheviki and the red guard are continuing. The council of workmen's and soldiers' delegates has issued different appeals to different sections of the community admitting the danger of the situation and supporting dictatorial powers to make the results of the revolution safe.

Premier Kerensky's call for extraordinary national council announced today from Petrograd to meet in Moscow July 31, was also forecast in embassy dispatches sent just prior to the decision. They stated that all parties had united in demanding an emergency meeting of all leaders, including conservatives, professors and others not now connected with the government.

Plenty of Food Assured.

Fears of food riots which originally precipitated the crisis in Petrograd leading to the revolution are dispelled, the dispatches add, by reports of splendid harvests from all over Russia. At the same time every effort is being made to improve the transportation system so that parts of the country will not be starving while others are supplied.

The Galician military defeat was further explained by mutiny in one grenadier division of from 16,000 to 20,000 men which opened up the front to the Germans and allowed them to drive in a wedge 20 miles deep, which necessitated the retirement of the whole of General Kornidoff's forces of 200,000 men.

Reports that negotiations are under way for sending American troops to Russia are flatly contradicted here, where it is stated that Russia has more men than she knows what to do with. America's great possibility lies in sending munitions to Russia, especially railroad materials

London, July 28.—Fresh and violent fighting has occurred in the streets of Petrograd in the last two days, according to a dispatch from Petrograd to the Copenhagen Berlingski Tindende, transmitted by the Exchange Telegraph company yesterday. The extreme socialists organized a great revolt, the dispatch adds, but the government troops immediately interfered and the riot was suppressed after lively fighting.

LENINE ESCAPES AFTER BATTLE.

Petrograd, July 28.—Nicholi Lenine, anti-war agitator and suspected German spy is at large after a pitched battle at Tornea, Finland, between the authorities and the agitators.

Madame Colontay, one of Lenine's ardent supporters, and believed to be in the pay of the German government, was arrested with the other agitators.

KERENSKY CALLS COUNCIL.

Petrograd, July 28.—The extreme gravity of the country's position in the front and rear impels premier Kerensky to convoke July 31, at Moscow the "extraordinary national council." All members of the Duma, prominent men from the chief centers of the empire, representatives of the Zemstvos, municipalities, labor unions and universities will participate.

TO MAN WARSHIPS.

London, July 28.—A dispatch to the Daily Mail from Petrograd says that Russian women have offered to train themselves as crews for battleships, and that Minister of the Navy Kerensky has accepted their offer.

The general had been hailed as a Polish patriot until the Germans found he had Russian sympathies.

Four People Killed In Auto-Wreck

Auto Struck By Train Backing While Switching

An awful catastrophe that has cast a gloom over two communities in particular and in the many others where the families were known took place last Thursday evening about dusk in Milford, the home of Mr. and Mrs. Nissen, when Morris Day of this neighborhood, Rev. Nissen, wife and sixteen-year-old daughter were killed their automobile being struck by a Milwaukee freight train.

The family except two of their sons were out riding in their car and when crossing the tracks of the Milwaukee railroad found the evening train switching, and though warning was given by the swinging of the lantern in the hands of the conductor that the train was switching yet by some means or other the youngest son who was driving did not seem to comprehend that the cars were so close and they caught the hind end of the car, throwing it around so that the car was ground beneath the cars on the track as were also the bodies of Mrs. Nisen and her daughter, while Mr. Nissen was thrown under the cars and they passed over his body. The mother and daughter were ground to pieces almost, dying immediately, while Mr. Nissen lived for about an hour after, and seemed to be conscious of what had happened for when a brother minister of his acquaintance, who at the time was passing went to his assistance he begged of him by name not to touch him.

Mr. Day, the father of Mrs. Nisson, was injured internaly but lingered until death came at eleven o'clock the following day, while the son who was driving had some minor injuries about his shoulder, neck and eyes.

Funeral services were held on Friday evening on the church lawn for those who had been killed, which was attended by over a thousand people while some twenty-five ministers were present in token of their respect. The services were in charge of the District Superintendent, Dr. McBurney.

The bodies of Mr. and Mrs. Nissen and their daughter were shipped Saturday morning to Garner and were met by a company of friends from Klemme and Garner who convoyed them to Klemme and on Saturday afternon the funeral was held from the Methodist church where again a vast audience of people gathered to give them respect, this service being under the charge of Dr. Clegg, District Superintendent, he being assisted by many of the ministers, while Dr. McBurney preached the sermon, Rev. Kettle of Garner reading the obituaries and Rev Gillies of Clear Lake speaking for the ministers and extending their sympathy.

The magnificent array of floral decorations bespoke the tribute of all who knew these good people and such tokens must indeed be a great solace to the three sons who so suddenly have been bereft of their parents and sister and grandfather.

The remains of Mr. Day were brought to Garner Sunday morning and the funeral was held at Klemme Monday afternoon, Rev. J. M. Howdeshel of Klemme preached the funeral sermon, Rev Clegg assisting with the service. The burial was at Goodell, where Bethel lodge A. F. & A. M. of Garner conducted the service.

Obituaries

Reneida Morris Day

Reneida Morris Day was born at Clearfield, Pennsylvania, August 11, 1846, and died as the result of a freight train backing over an auto in which he was riding at Milford, Iowa, July 27th, 1917, at the age of 70 years, 11 months and 16 days.

He enlisted in 1865 as a private in the Civil War in Co. K, 3rd Illinois Cavalry, under Lieutenant Danley and was promoted to the office of sergeant. He was honorably discharged on October 10th, 1865, at the age of eighteen years.

At the age of 19 he moved to Uppergrove, Iowa, near what is now Goodell. Here he was united in marriage to Miss Dora Elder, March 6th, 1871. To this union were born seven children, five of whom survive: Mrs. Fred Skow of Watertown, South Dakota, Mrs. John Baumgartner of Klemme, John of Klemme, Steven of Hubard, Oregon, Morris of Mont Pelier, Idaho. Two are dead, one died in infancy, and Mrs. Hans Nissen of Milford, who preceeded her father to the great beyond but a few hours.

Mr. Day's companion preceded him to the grave October 26th, 1887, thirty years ago, leaving him the care of six small children. He toiled and sacrificed to rear and educate these children and finally launched them all in life with good characters and educations.

Mr. Day was a successful land dealer and banker. He wielded a large influence for good in the community in which he lived. He was a member of the Presbyterian church and of the Masonic fraternity where he had attained to the 32nd degree, Scottish Rite. He was also a member of the Commandery. He was a good citizen, a kind father and a well spoken of neighbor.

Besides these children, he leaves to mourn their loss several grand-children, and other relatives: one brother of Everson, Washington, and one sister, Mrs. Hockey of Washington, Pa. To know him was to hold him in high esteem as a friend.

The community joins in sympathy with the bereft children, grand-children, and other relatives.

An empty chair is at the table,
A vacant place is in the home.
A voice is stilled to never speak on earth again.
The fall of footsteps no more sound crossing the threshold,
Anxious hearts wait and look for the form that never returns.

Funeral services were conducted Monday afternoon from the English M. E. church by the writer, assisted by Dr. Herbert Clegg, of Clear Lake.

The extremely large crowd that attended the funeral was a fit evidence of a host of friends and acquaintances that Mr. Day has made during his stay in this community.

The remains were laid to rest in the beautiful cemetery at Goodell, by the Masonic fraternity.

Hans Carnet Nissen.

Hans Carnet Nissen was the oldest son of Mr. and Mrs Hans Nissen. He was born on a farm two miles east of Garner on the twelth day of April, 1872. As a child he is said to have been very apt in memorizing portions of the bible and showing his interest in the things that were helpful. When quite a boy he felt that the ministry was his work and though handicapped by poverty yet he never gave up but by dint of hard study and whatever work he could find to do labored to equip himself which he did by completing with honors the college course at Morningside College in Sioux City, as well as supporting his family while there.

Such grit was characteristic of his entire life and labors as a minister and the churches that he served as pastor evidence by the growth of membership and increased valuation of property the interest and enthusiasm that he imparted to them.

As a preacher he was clear in his thinking and positive in his convictions of what appealed to him as right and true, and when thus convinced he was not afraid to proclaim it to the people who came to hear him preach

While yet a young man Mr Nissen used to preach in the schoolhouses around Garner because of his success in this work the presiding elder of the Methodist church appointed him as pastor at Thompson where by his indomintable courage and example of labor he built up a strong society.

When he was twenty-two years of age he married Estella Dell Day, at Klemme, Iowa, on the 15th day of July 1896, and to them were born five children, three boys and two girls, one of whom died when but a babe six months old and the other, Alice, being killed in the accident with her father and mother.

Estella Dell Day Nissen.

Mrs. Nissen was born on the fifth day of February, 1875, at Klemme, Iowa, being the second daughter of Mr and Mrs. Morris Day. She grew to womanhood in these parts, being a student in the public schools of Garner where she graduated when she was seventeen years of age.

As a wife of a minister she was in every way equal to her husband, and no small part of his success is due to the faithfuness and efficiency with which she performed her tasks both in the church and the community. As a mother she spared no pains to make the lives of her family what a christian mother believed they ought to be, and as one has aptly said, "she could always cut the garment according to the size of the cloth."

Miss Alice Nissen.

Alice, who suffered death with her parents was a young woman of nearly seventeen years, being born at Sioux City on the 28th day of November 1900. She had just finished her junior year in the high school at Milford and had in mind when she finished her schooling to go as a missionary to one of the foreign fields of the Methodist church, and her nature would have made her such a worker as would have adorned the Christian religion for it was of that sunny type that sheds rays of cheer whereever it went.

SCRAP HEAPS VS. FLOWER GARDENS

We were somewhat surprised the other evening when we were walking around the town and stopped to talk with Mr. Fred Ridder, he asked us to step in to see his blacksmith shop. Now usually a blacksmith shop is a very dirty place with heaps of scrap iron piled around in the corners and out in front, but not so with Mr. Ridder's shop. This is the neatest shop we have ever seen, the floors were clean and well swept, everything was in it's place. The various machines were neatly arranged and in good order, free from dirt and grease. Mr. Ridder also keeps a nice lawn around the shop and has a nice flower garden at one side. This is something very unusual about a machine shop of any kind. We might add that he has a full equipment of the most modern machines, including a big power lathe and well-pipe threader. He was repairing some threshing machine engines when we went by, putting in new flues and replacing worn parts; he has over twenty years' experience in that line of work.

His shop is a nice double front cement block building, in the north half of which he has his work shop and office and in the other half he has the sales room for the automobiles which he sells.

There are many attractive places in Klemme and we will try to give a little sketch of them from time to time. Klemme is one of the biggest little towns in Iowa and these features deserve publicity.

Last week one evening Mr. H. F. Ludeke invited us to come down to his house to see some violins he has made. He has a very fine collection of violins that he himself has made. Mr. Ludeke is a fine old gentleman, and is very entertaining in his explanation of the violin making art. It takes a lot of hard work and patience to construct a good violin such as Mr. Ludeke manufactures. He has also invented a caliper for minute measurements, this instrument he claims is the most accurate instrument that has ever been devised for violin makers. We are much interested and will call on him again when he is making an instrument.

"I requested that M. Lepine should make certain inquiries—"

"Yes, about the wireless," and Delcasse looked at him closely. "Tell me, why did you think of that?"

"I do not know," answered Crochard, rubbing his forehead slowly; "but as I sat last night gazing at the wreck, a thought came to me—a vague thought—not to be put into words * * *"

"Well," said Delcasse, as he paused, "I had the same thought last night, before I slept. It seems to me a most striking coincidence. Are you aware that, in the case of the Jena, wireless was mentioned as a possible cause?"

"Yes," answered Crochard; "I am aware of that."

The eyes of the two men met in a long glance. Then Delcasse touched a bell.

"Introduce General Marbeau," he said to his secretary.

The latter returned in a moment with a dark little man in full uniform. Then he went out again and closed the door. The little man bowed deeply to the minister of marine.

"Be seated, general," said Delcasse. "M. Lepine, I think you already know—as who does not! This other gentleman I will not name—I will only say that he is a coadjutor whose services we value very highly. He has certain questions to ask you, which I wish you to answer as though I myself were asking them. Proceed, sir," and he nodded to Crochard. "General Marbeau is the chief of our wireless service."

"What wireless stations are there in the city of Toulon, General?" Crochard began.

"None, sir, except the one at the arsenal," Marbeau answered, looking at his questioner with discreet curiosity.

"And in the neighborhood?"

"None nearer than Marseilles."

"There are no private installations?"

"The government does not permit private installations."

"Yet there might be some, clandestinely built?"

"That is possible."

"However, you can assure me of this: if any such do exist, they are outside the law?"

"Undoubtedly."

"Why are private stations prohibited?"

"They are prohibited because they would interfere with the government stations. You understand, sir, that wireless waves clash in the air, as it were; when they cross or intermingle, the result is a confusing chatter, until the sending and receiving instruments have been carefully tuned with each other. Even that does not always overcome it. A few private stations have been authorized strictly for scientific purposes, but there is none nearer than that at the University of Lyons."

"Do you ever suffer from interference here?"

"Oh, yes; the English have a very powerful station at Gibraltar and another at Malta; their battleships are all equipped with it, as are those of Italy. So are the passenger steamers which enter the Mediterranean. The air is often filled with messages."

"Has there been any such interference during the past few days?"

"Yes, a great deal of it; one instance in particular of which my operators have complained."

"Ah!" said Crochard. "Will you tell us exactly what it was?"

"Last Saturday," explained Marbeau, "about 3 in the afternoon, there came from somewhere a series of long dashes, lasting nearly half a second, and spaced about two seconds apart. This continued for perhaps half an hour."

"You had no idea as to their origin?"

"We thought that perhaps the English were tuning up a new and very powerful instrument at Gibraltar."

"You had no way of verifying this?"

"We did not try to do so."

"Was this interruption repeated?"

"Yes; our automatic recorder shows that the signals began again a little before 5 o'clock yesterday morning and continued for nearly two hours."

Crochard's eyes were shining.

"At what hour was La Liberte destroyed?" he asked.

"The first explosion was at 5:50. There were two others, a few minutes apart. The main magazine exploded at very close to 6 o'clock.

"So that these signals began at least an hour before and continued nearly an hour past that time?"

"That is so, sir," assented Marbeau, in surprise; "but I can imagine no connection—"

"Do not imagine anything," broke in Delcasse quickly, his voice quivering with excitement. "Perhaps there is no connection, but nevertheless I think these signals should have been reported to me. Come in," he added, as a tap sounded at the door.

His secretary entered and handed him a telegram. Delcasse's eyes were positively gleaming as he read it.

"Better and better!.. he cried. "Oh, this is a game after my own heart!" and he tossed the telegram to Lepine. "Read it aloud!" he added, "that I may be sure my eyes have not deceived me!"

And Lepine picked up the message and read:

Note B162864R, 100 francs, one of series of 300 such notes sent to Imperial Bank, Berlin, September 8.
Linne, Governor Bank of France.

There was a moment's silence, Marbeau staring blankly, but the other three gazing into each other's faces with shining eyes.

"Perfect, perfect!" murmured Delcasse, and seized the telegram and read it again.

"The next step, sir," said Crochard quietly, "is to instruct every bank in France to report immediately the receipt of any of the other 299!"

Delcasse drew a deep breath, pulled a pad of blanks toward him, and scribbled a few words.

"See that this is sent at once," he said, and the secretary took the message and hastened away.

Then Delcasse did something which he had not done since that night, five years before, when word came that England had signed the secret treaty: he removed his great glasses, got out his handkerchief, and deliberately wiped his eyes.

"Your pardon, gentlemen," he said, with a twisted smile. "This is for me a great moment. You know my dream! I believed it shattered; but now I think that it may yet come true!" He snapped his glasses on again and swung around to Crochard. "If it does," he added, "I shall have you to thank! Proceed with your questions."

"There are no more questions, sir," said Crochard; "but we have a little excursion to make. It will consume perhaps an hour, and I think that you will find it interesting. M. Lepine has a closed carriage at the private entrance. I would suggest that General Marbeau accompany us. He will be of great service. Can we start at once?"

For answer, Delcasse leaped to his feet and seized his hat. There was no longer in his mind any question as to the importance of this inquiry, and the comparative unimportance of that other one, opening with much pomp at the prefecture. In fact, he had forgotten all about it!

"The private entrance, you say?" he asked. "Then come this way," and he led the way down the private staircase. The carriage stood at the curb.

Crochard glanced at the driver.

"He is your man, of course?" he said to Lepine. "Good." And, as the others entered, he stopped to speak a few words to him. Then he, too, leaped inside, and slammed the door.

The driver spoke to his horses, and they were off, along the Rue Nationale, across the Place St. Roche, through the botanic gardens, past the marine observatory, under the Porte Nationale, and through the faubourgs. At the end of 20 minutes, the town was left behind, and Crochard stopped the carriage, got out, and mounted to the seat beside the driver.

Then, at a slower pace, the carriage climbed a narrow road leading toward the hills back of the town. It was apparently little used, for it was overgrown with grass, over which the carriage wheels rolled noiselessly. Inside the carriage, Delcasse spoke only once.

"On this day of surprises, I am prepared for anything!" he declared, and relapsed into silence.

At last the carriage stopped, and pulling back the curtains, those within it saw they were in the midst of a grove of lofty beeches.

Crochard jumped from the seat and opened the door.

"We must get out here," he said; and when the others had alighted, he started off before them among the trees.

Delcasse kept close at the leader's heels, fairly panting with eagerness. Lepine followed and Marbeau came last. The rustling of the dead leaves beneath their feet was the only sound which broke the stillness. At the end of five minutes, they came to what was apparently a deserted shed. Its door was secured by a heavy hasp and padlock. Crochard drew a key from his pocket, opened the padlock, released the hasp, and threw back the door.

"Enter, my friends!" he cried, and stood aside that they might pass.

They crowded in and stood staring about them. For a moment, in the semi-darkness, they could see nothing, then certain vague shapes detached themselves—a table, a chair, strange jars, a queer looking clock * * *

Marbeau uttered a sudden startled exclamation.

"Why, this is a wireless plant!" he cried.

"Precisely, sir!" agreed Crochard. "The plant from which came those peculiar signals!"

CHAPTER VII.

THE HUT IN THE GROVE.

General Marbeau bent with the interest of an expert above the rude table on which the apparatus was installed, and examined it for some moments in silence. Then he straightened up and glanced at Delcasse.

"Well?" asked the latter.

"It is indeed, a wireless installation, sir," said Marbeau, "or at least, part of one. Most of the instruments of transmission are here, but there are no recording instruments. In other words, wireless messages might be sent from here, but none could be received—unless this is a recorder of some sort," and he pointed to a small instrument of clock like appearance which stood on the table.

"No," said Crochard: "that is not a recorder—that is the sender."

"The sender?" repeated Marbeau.

"Yes. You have noticed there is no key?"

"Yes, and I do not understand its absence."

"This device takes the place of it—it was by means of this that the spaced signals were sent. Listen."

He bent above the clock, and the others heard a song as of a strong spring being wound. Then he stood erect: there were two sharp ticks; then a long white snap of electricity: two ticks and another snap, two ticks and another snap * * *

"Yes, that is the signal!" cried Marbeau, and bent again above the mechanism. In a moment he understood.

Before the clock face was a single long hand, a second hand, terminating in a thin, springlike strip of platinum. The circumference of the face was divided into 60 spaces, and at every third space was a slender copper pin, which the end of the second hand touched in passing. Two wires, one connected with the second hand, the other presumably with the copper pins, ran from the clock down to the heavy batteries on the floor. Every three seconds the circuit was automatically closed, and a long flash sent along the conducting wire out into the air. Marbeau stood listening for a moment longer, then loosened one of the wires. The signals stopped.

"Now let us see the aerial," he said, and led the way outside.

But there was no aerial in sight. Then Crochard's finger pointed out a series of wires among the trees to the left of the hut. Walking directly beneath them, Marbeau saw that there were three wires parallel with each other, and that they were stretched between two trees about 50 feet apart. From each of them dropped a lead wire which led into the hut. An arm of wood had been secured to each of the trees, and to these the wires were fastened by means of porcelain insulators.

"But such an aerial would not be effective!" Marbeau protested. "It would be muffled and deadened by the leaves and branches all about it."

"There are no branches in front of it," said Crochard. "If you will look, you will see that they have been very carefully cleared away in that single direction. As I understand wireless, the waves released from those wires up yonder permeate the atmosphere in every direction."

"That is true."

"With equal intensity?"

"No; they would be most intense in the direction in which the wires extend."

"Ah!" said Crochard. "And, as we may perceive from the way in which the trees are trimmed, it was only in that direction that the builder of this affair desired them to penetrate. Can you not guess what that direction is? If you will climb this tree and look along the wires, you will find that they point directly toward the wreck of La Liberte."

For a moment, the three stared at Crochard without speaking, then Marbeau threw off his coat and started up the tree. It was not an easy climb, but he was an agile man, and at last he reached the arm to which the wire were affixed. He remained for some moments looking out along them; then he slowly descended.

"It is true," he said, in a low voice, as he resumed his coat. "The wires could hardly have been so placed by accident."

"It was not by accident," said Crochard.

"And yet," went on Marbeau, "I do not see what all this can have to do with the disaster."

"Nor I," agreed M. Delcasse. "And yet as M. Cro— as our friend here says, all this was not done by accident."

"I would suggest," said Crochard, "that we return to M. Delcasse's apartment. We can talk there without fear of being overheard—a thing that is not possible among all these trees."

Marbeau took a last look at the wireless apparatus; then Crochard locked the door of the hut, and gave the key to the minister.

"Where did you get this key, my friend?" asked Delcasse, looking at it curiously.

"About that there is no mystery," smiled Crochard. "I purchased it, together with the lock yonder, this morning. I found it necessary to break the original lock before I could enter the hut. It may be well to station a guard here," he added, "until you are ready to dismantle the place."

Delcasse nodded, and slipped the key into his pocket; and together they made their way to the waiting carriage.

The trip back was a silent one. Delcasse and Lepine, their brains aching with the effort, were trying to understand; Marbeau, convinced that the explosion could not have been caused by wireless, was marshaling his reasons; and Crochard—Crochard sat with placid countenance gazing straight ahead of him—but that placid countenance masked supreme intellectual effort.

At last the carriage stopped.

"You will wait here," said Delcasse to the driver, and, as soon as he reached his office, summoned his secretary and directed that a guard of four marines be sent by the carriage to the hut in the grove. Then he sat down, rolled a cigaret, and passed tobacco and paper to his companions. "And now," he said, looking at Crochard, "let us hear what you have to tell us."

"There is not much to tell, sir," answered Crochard. "I learned of the existence of this hut yesterday evening. Some children, searching for mushrooms for a friend of mine, who is a restaurateur, happened to see the wires among the trees, and told him of their discovery. He thought it so curious that he at once sent word to me."

"And you, of course, sent word back that he was to tell no one else," said Delcasse, with a smile.

"Yes, I thought that best. I paid a visit to the hut as soon as it was light this morning, entered it, examined it, and convinced myself that it was really a wireless station. Then I made certain inquiries. The grove, it appears, is owned by a gentleman of Marseilles, and was once much larger than it is now. The hut was built for the use of charcoal burners, but has not been occupied for more than two years. I would suggest that the police ascertain whether the owner was aware he had a tenant."

"We will do so," said Delcasse. "But who was this tenant?"

Why Little Willie Leaves Home.

According to Dr Charles B. Daven port, director of the department of ex perimental evolution, Carnegie institu tion, children run away from home for exactly the same reasons that their par. ent take voyages to Europe or their uncles go off on fishing trips Dr Dav enport has written a book on this sub ject, nomadism, as it is called

It is, he holds, the primitive race in stinct to wander We all have it, more or less, but most of us are so hedged about by the "call of the wild," or if we feel it, we put it aside at once But many persons feel it strongly, especially when the spring comes, and then they long to go away to take an ocean voy age or to get into the woods.

Americans are more nomadic than other people they are descended from nomadic stock, or they would not be here. Their ancestors were a selection of the more nomadic individuals of Eu rope.

Man is more naturally inclined to roam than woman her place having from time immemorial been in the home, his place having been to go out into the world and hunt and fight for her. Therefore, there are more men tramps than women It is easier for a man to ride the brake beams than it is for a woman

As might be expected, more boys run away than girls. The greatest number of runaways occur at the age of 15, but there are many at 13 and 14 It is gen erally assumed that the early life of the child repeats the early life of the race, so it is not astonishing that all children are tempted to get out into the world and seek adventure

TRUE FISH STORY.

Long Beach - What is said to be the largest catch of fish ever made with a seine by one boat in southern California was brought into the harbor today by the launch Maryland The Maryland brought in 27 tons or 54 000 pounds of barracuda and yellow tail The boat because of the weight of the big catch was forced to proceed at a snail's pace to its dock at the Long Beach Tuna Canning company's plant

Yellowtail and barracuda are now bringing $40 a ton at all the canner ies. Last year they sold at $10 a ton

Yours Is Mine, Mine My Own.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—Judge McKenna in county court decided that Miss Marcella Craig, of Springdale, could 'joyride' with whomsoever she wished, even if the car she was using was won in a raffle for her by a former sweetheart.

Last fall Fred Atkinson, of New Ken sington, took Miss Craig to a picnic where he bought for her a 10-cent raf fle ticket for an automobile. The ticket bore the lucky number and Miss Craig was awarded the car, valued at $500

For a time Atkinson and Miss Craig used the car together. Later his erst while sweetheart began to "joyride" with other men. Angry, Atkinson took possession of the car, and Miss Craig brought suit for its recovery Judge McKenna ordered the car returned to Miss Craig and assessed the costs of the case on Atkinson

Harden's Great Sin.

From the New York World

Until he touched on the one point of the kaiser's powers as war lord, Maximilian Harden was left free in Die Zukunft to exercise his brilliant powers as critic of the government. The field was open to him except in that sacred corner His transgression was summarily punished when he justified the aims of Germany's enemies in seeking to create "a situation which would remove the decision of peace or war from the will of one mortal and place it in the hands of the community"

The divine right of the kaiser the one mortal, to rule must not be questioned He has asserted it too often with a rattle of his sword in the scabbard The autocracy that holds dominion over Germany must be omnipotent and infallible Who chal lenges that truth invites the instant wrath of the powers of the German government

To plead that the choice of peace or war should lie in "the hands of the com munity" is the unpardonable sin against the Hohenzollerns. All else may be for given, that act of blasphemy, never'

England Materialistic Now.

From the London Saturday Review

The nation is now setting to work in earnest to get rid of its heirlooms, and by the time the war and the settlement are over it should not be cumbered with very much of what remains. The Elles mere library, for instance, has been knocked down to Mr Smith, of America, for more than $1,000,000. Doubtless Mr Smith merits the prise which has fallen to him, and doubtless he is a good man indeed, is not the fact that he has more than $1,000,000 proof to many minds of that?

America will find a place for a library for which England today has no use While we are about it, why not make a thoroughly good job of it and knock a few millions out of the Bodleian and the national gallery? We have got the cus tomers, we have got a certain amount of stuff still left; then why not realize the money?

Would Popularize War.

From the Springfield, Mass., Republican.

There are some very disgusted people including not a few editors, who censure congress for its unsympathetic attitude toward whisky. Has it occurred to them that putting whisky out of business for the war will tend to justify the war in the minds of many citizens who have never taken a deep interest in the niceties of international law or the profundities of world politics, but who are as much inclined to judge a war as they are to judge a new washing machine by its prac tical results? Show these God fearing people of simple habits and clean liv that this war has already ended the pr duction of whisky in the United Stat its importation and its sale, and the war will begin to look better to them and the government will seem the more worthy their support, as the French say, to th end.

MEANING OF TERMS EMPLOYED BY ARMY

Here's Chance to Brush Up on Language of the Men in Khaki.

With the United States on the eve of having troops in actual physical con tact in the European battle front, an interpretation of the military terms in general use will be an aid to the gen eral reader. The following are among those in constant use.

A corps is two or more divisions, commanded by a major general.

A division is composed of two or more brigades, also commanded by a major general.

A brigade, commanded by a brigadier general, is composed of two or more regiments and independent companies or battalions.

A regiment of infantry consists of 12 line companies and three additional companies. It is commanded by a col onel, with the following additional offi cers One lieutenant colonel, three majors, 15 captains as company com manders, three of them also being members of the colonel's staff as adju tant, quartermaster and commissary; two lieutenants to each company, one lieutenant acting on each of the three majors' staff

A battalion is made up of four com panies and is commanded by a major.

A company of infantry consists of about 150 men, divided into two plat oons, platoons are divided into squads. A platoon is commanded by a lieutenant—a commissioned officer; two or more squads are commanded by a sergeant a squad is commanded by a corporal and comprises seven men be sides the corporal.

A company of cavalry is called a troop and a battalion of cavalry is called a squadron

A company of artillery is called a battery It is divided into sections and there may be different numbers of guns, according to the kind of artil lery

Three batteries of artillery make a battalion

The word "company," "troop," or "battery" should not be used before the letter as "Company B." It would be the same as to say "street Jackson." The letter comes first, just as the numeral comes before the word regiment "Second regiment" Not Regiment Second

Troops are either "federals" (regular) or national guard Every male citizen of the United States between the age of 18 and 45 is a member of the milit ia Never use the word when refer ring to organized bodies of troops.

There are no such things as "mili tary officials" or "army officials" in military parlance They are national guard and army officers.

A skirmish engagement, brush fight or encounter is not a battle.

A battle is an engagement for the possession of a certain point and is general in its character Large bodies of troops are engaged more than a brigade Otherwise the fight is an en gagement a skirmish or an encounter.

Never say Captain Jones and his soldiers of Company A Say "a com pany commanded by Captain Jones," did so and so

Any irregular body of troops less than a company, or troops, is called a detachment, unless it is a platoon or squad or a section of artillery. Never say "Lieutenant Jones and a number of men" from such and such an organ ization Say a detachment from A company, commanded by Lieutenant Jones'

Ammunition is spoken of in terms of rounds. Fifty rounds means 50 cart ridges 50 shots.

Never say muskets There are not any Artillerymen carry pistols and not revolvers

Troops generally move in columns. (The usual column is four men abreast —two ranks comprising a squad, with the corporal as the man on the left in the rear rank) They go into the firing line in "extended order"—sometimes referred to as a skirmish line. Troops are sent into battle or engagement as the firing line, the support and the re serve. The tactical unit in line of bat tle or engagement is the battalion.

A picket consists of several men— generally a squad. One of the picket is a sentinel or sentry In front and on the flanks of all troops in camp are outposts--pickets. All troops doing guard duty, picket duty, outpost duty, etc., are commanded by "The officers of the day," so designated for a period of 24 hours as are the troops on guard duty

Troops carry "ponchos"—rubber blankets. Not raincoats or rain capes. Mounted troops and drivers are equipped with "slickers."

A bayonet is kept in a scabbard.

A rifle or carbine is loaded with a clip.

Fatigue duty refers to work to be done about a camp.

A camp is "policed" when it is cleaned up—rid of rubbish and the like.

A cavalryman is called a "trooper."

A recruit is not a "rookie," unless you want to use slang The phrase "new recruit" is redundant.

Troops are "mustered" into the serv ice and out. Also they are "mustered" each month for the benefit of the pay master—that he may know whether dead men are drawing pay.

The insignia of United States officers designating rank are as follows:

Second Lieutenant—Brown braid on cuffs, gold-black hat braid, U S. on collar, leather leggins.

First Lieutenant—One bar on shoul der, other insignia corresponding to second lieutenant.

Captain—Two bars on shoulder.

Major—Gold leaf on shoulder.

Lieutenant Colonel—Silver leaf on shoulder.

Colonel—Silver eagle on shoulder.

Brigadier General—One silver star on shoulder.

Major General—Two silver stars on shoulder.

Lieutenant General — Three silver stars on shoulder.

Full General—Four silver stars on shoulder.

All grades wear brown braid on cuffs, gold-black cord on hats, leather leggins and U. S. on collar.

The insignia worn by the various branches of the service are as follows:

Infantry—Two crossed rifles.

Cavalry—Two crossed sabres.

Artillery—Two crossed cannon.

Medical—Mercury wand with in twined snakes.

The designating colors for each branch are: Infantry, blue; cavalry, yellow; artillery, red; medical corps, maroon.

Cool Fashions.

Soft greens.
Organdies and georgets.
Foulards, voiles and batistes.
Foliage trimmed millinery, usually flowerless.

A Striking Color Scheme.

Think of a pair of purple eyes under a hat made of layers of purple chiffon, and then imagine the color of the Geor get crepe blouse—flesh color, banded in every desirable place with a bright line of flame colored satin.

SIMPLICITY MARKS PRESIDENT'S DAILY LIFE

Washington, D C.—Simplicity marks the daily routine of President Wilson in these busy war days at the capital There is plenty of work for the chief executive, but on orders of his physi cian the president devotes a certain part of each day to "keeping in trim"

Eleven holes of golf in the morning, a theater two evenings a week, a short automobile ride in the afternoon and an occasional close friend at luncheon or dinner constitutes the recreation that provides a half way relaxation from the strain of executive p...

President Wilson is a man of unusual concentrative powers. When he consid ers a legislative measure it is weighed from every possible angle. All else is excluded

He plays just as hard as he works. This, it has been said, enables him to get more benefit from his limited amount of exercise.

On the links every fiber is concen trated on the immediate drive or putt he is executing. At the theater the per formers either hold his undivided atten tion or bore him to distraction. A well trained animal act or a rollicking come dian are always rewarded by hearty applause and true ringing laughter from the presidential box in Washing ton's vaudeville theater.

Appointments with the president are arranged a day in advance. Policemen are stationed at every entrance and only those who have appointments are allowed to enter the White House grounds.

Recently a blood relative of the president, here for a short stay, found it impossible to call at the White House.

Fifteen minutes is the usual time al lowed for interviews, but it is seldom they last that long.

The secret service guard has been doubled. When the president goes for a walk they go with him. When he at tends the theater they scatter on every floor of the playhouse. The secret serv ice automobile follows the president's car at two lengths and the crowd which congregates when the machine stops is closely scrutinized before the president alights.

These precautions are voluntary on the part of the secret service men. The president has never requested extra protection. He does not delay stepping from his automobile until the service men have sized up the crowd. Not the slightest nervousness on the president's part is ever noticeable in public.

The wiseness of not neglecting exer cise and recreation shows in his per sonal appearance. Despite the stress of war problems the president is "looking fit as a fiddle."

Washington's Strangle Hold.

From the Kansas City Star.

With becoming diffidence may it be suggested from the safe distance of Kan sas City that it is hardly becoming in war time for the government to permit its clerks to work only seven hours a day with 30-day vacation?

This mild protest is put forth with diffidence because the Star recalls the tremendous wrath which Representative Borland called down on his head last year when he proposed in congress that the clerks might work eight hours a day To an outsider it would seem a mere common sense proposal, and not one to get excited about. But Wash ington could not have been more stirred if the cruel Mr Borland had proposed to deprive it of life, liberty and the pur suit of happiness

His mail was flooded with indignant letters The local newspapers denounced him Ministers preached sermons against him and his monstrous proposals. At re ceptions Washington women would re proach him for trying to ruin the city.

The clerks were not the chief source of the agitation. They would have charged to the 8-hour day with some grumbling but still without violence. The real trou ble arose from the real estate men, mer chants and bankers. For it is self ev dent that the shorter time the clerks work the more clerks there must be to do the work and the more clerks, the more fami lies to house the more grocery bills to be paid, and the better business for banks

Washington business men did not pro pose to permit the nation to save money through efficiency, when they had a financial interest in waste They were able to control congress and Mr. Bor land's hated scheme for economy was at once sat on.

Germans Wear Paper.

From the New York Sun.

A careful examination of the clothing worn by German prisoners reveals an ap palling shortage of materials for the manufacture of cloth Most German uni forms are now woven of various fibers, which prove useless in heavy weather Water soaks through them, they shrink and crumble and fall easily into disre pair

Under their uniforms the Germans wear even more atrocious imitation clothes of pulp paper, and the people in the German towns long ago saw the last of good cloth materials and become resigned to imita tions The white shirts which are dis played for sale in Berlin shops look like good linen, but one trip to the laundry brings a quick revelation.

The story is told by an American who recently left Austria, where he was in hospital with a fever. A Polish doctor who attended him refused a fee, but as a parting wish asked for one or two white shirts. The American gave him all his shirts, along with a dozen cakes of soap. The doctor almost wept for joy over the soap, saying he would place the precious cakes in safe hands to be taken back home to his wife in Poland, who had not seen a piece of soap for months.

Bondholders by the Million.

From the Philadelphia Inquirer.

About 4,000,000 of Americans are soon to become stockholders in the United States, and most of them are relatively poor. The number of subscribers exceeds all expec tations. Of the total subscription of more than $3,000,000,000, 65 per cent is for $10,000 or less. These subscribers will get their bonds in full, and they are 93 per cent of the entire number.

This is gratifying from every point of view. The more widely distributed are the bonds, the stronger the patriotic heartbeats of the country will be. Give the man of moderate means—the man who must scheme to save money for bonds—every possible chance. The rich man can wait. He will be needed later on more than he is now. For other bond issues are to come. We have only begun to raise money.

The Soldier's Hazard.

From the Seattle Post Intelligencer.

While modern war seems to have in creased the hazard to human life and in duced long lists of casualties, the fact that millions of men are concerned in the fight ing lowers the percentage of losses. With 2,000,000 soldiers at the front in France, Great Britain lost in one month of bomb ing and trench warfare 114,000 men in killed and wounded, or less than 6 per cent. In the civil war losses reached a much greater percentages At the battle of Antietam 23,000 union and confederate soldiers were killed or wounded in 12 hours of fighting, representing about 20 per cent of the forces engaged. The haz ard of the civil war soldier was thus nearly four times greater than that of the British soldiers in France.

Trench warfare is responsible for the greatly lessened percentage of European losses. If the armies of Europe had fol lowed the open warfare of the early days of the war the opposing forces would long ago have been annihilated. The original army sent by England to France at the beginning of the struggle was practically destroyed in the first six months of fight ing.

Modern weapons and modern methods have greatly increased the capacity for destruction, but trench warfare and im proved defense systems have minimized the risks. The soldier of today has much less chance of being killed or wounded than the soldier of the civil war.

PARAFFIN CAN BE CLEANED

Do Not Throw It Away Because It Has Become Dirty, Says Specialist of Agricultural Department.

Paraffin that has become unclean through usage in canning and preserv ing may be cleaned and reused.

Don't throw it away because dirt and trash have become mixed with it. Many times it can be cleaned with a brush in cold water.

If this does not remove all the dirt, says a specialist of the United States department of agriculture, heat the paraffin to boiling and strain it through two or three thicknesses of cheese cloth placed over a funnel, or a thin layer of absorbent cotton over one thickness of cheesecloth may be used as the strainer.

One straining should be sufficient ordinarily, but if the paraffin still is unclean, heat and strain again. Any paraffin lodging in the strainer may be recovered by heating the cloth and pouring the hot liquid into another strainer.

Don't Poison Baby.

FORTY YEARS AGO almost every mother thought her child must have PAREGORIC or laudanum to make it sleep. These drugs will produce sleep, and a FEW DROPS TOO MANY will produce the SLEEP FROM WHICH THERE IS NO WAKING. Many are the children who have been killed or whose health has been ruined for life by paregoric, laudanum and morphine, each of which is a narcotic product of opium. Druggists are prohibited from selling either of the narcotics named to children at all, or to anybody without labelling them "poison." The definition of "narcotic" is: "A medicine which relieves pain and produces sleep, but which in poisonous doses produces stupor, coma, convulsions and death." The taste and smell of medicines containing opium are disguised, and sold under the names of "Drops," "Cordials," "Soothing Syrups," etc. You should not permit any medicine to be given to your children without you or your physician know of what it is composed. Canadian Farmers Profit From Wheat

The war's devastation of European crops has caused an unusual demand for grain from the American Continent. The people of the world must be fed and wheat near $2 a bushel offers great profits to the farmer. Canada's invitation is therefore especially attractive. She wants settlers to make money and happy, prosperous homes for themselves by helping her raise immense wheat crops.

You can get a Homestead of 160 acres FREE and other lands at remarkably low prices. During many years Canadian wheat fields have averaged 20 bushels to the acre many yields as high as 45 bushels to the acre. Wonderful crops also of Oats, Barley and Flax.

Mixed farming as profitable an industry as grain raising The excellent grasses full of nutrition are the only food required for beef or dairy purposes. Good schools, churches, markets convenient, climate excellent.

There is an extra demand for farm labor to replace the many young men who have volunteered for the war. The Government is urging farmers to put extra acreage into grain. Write for literature and particulars as to reduced railway rates to Supt. of Immigration, Ottawa, Canada, or

STATE FAIRS VOLUNTEER AS FOOD TRAINING CAMPS

National Fair Association Offers Facilities to the Government to Promote Production and Conservation of Food

Washington, D. C.,

Representatives of the American Association of Fairs and Expositions, in convention at Washington, have tendered to the Government through the Secretary of Agriculture the services and appliances of the State Fairs as food-training camps to promote food production, food conservation, effective marketing, livestock production, and more efficient agriculture. A. L. Sponsler, Hutchinson, Kansas, as president of the association, at a meeting at the Department of Agriculture, pointed out that these fairs annually have an attendance of fifteen to twenty million people, and stated that the association was ready to set aside as many of the fair activities as possible to bring the Government's programs of food conservation and production to the attention of this audience, and to demonstrate methods of co-operating effectively in national measures.

Representatives of the department with the approval of the Secretary of Agriculture, pointed out to the association several important directions in which the fairs can be made more directly to serve the Nation in the present emergency.

Washington, D. C., —The Iowa State Fair, August 22-31, is now in the service of the United States Government.

In a statement today, Herbert C. Hoover, Government Food Administrator, designated the Iowa State Fair a Food Training Camp, at which all the people in its territory can study the problems of food efficiency which he intends to place before them. Similar Food Training Camps will be conducted at practically all the other large fairs of the country.

"It is the intention of the government to co-operate with the fairs in every way possible in convincing ev-

A Lawn Party

The "Loyal Workers" Bible Class for young married people of the German M. E. Church of which Mrs. Geo. Gruetzmacher is teacher held a lawn social at the lovely country home of Mr and Mrs. Otto Lemke, Monday evening. Even though the weather looked very threatening a crowd of over 35 was present. After a short program and business session the evening was spent in playing games in which every one joined. To say all had a good time does not half express the feeling of everyone present. Refreshments of cake and ice cream were served by committee till all had plenty. If there is anyone who thinks an organized class is not interesting come to church on Sunday morning where the "Loyal Workers" will meet you and prove to you that the study of God's Word is far more interesting than anything you have ever studied and more necessary than you have ever tho't.

STAND BEHIND OUR FIGHTING MEN

America today is filled with young men of the country who wear their country's uniform and who have offered their lives to the service of their country. Every city, every town every hamlet, every country community has some of its boys in the military uniform of their country. They are the very flower of our young manhood.

These are the men who are to go to the battle front. How effective they will be there, how safe they will be there depends on the support that their country gives them. The slower the United States is to exert it's full power and put an end to the carnage in Europe the more of those Americans who are now in France and those who are soon to join them will suffer death and the greater number of American homes will be made desolate.

It is not to be believed that some national catastrophe, some calamity that will be shameful to us if comes from lack of preparation or from our failure to stand behind our soldiers, must occur to awaken our people to their duty.

The soldiers of the United States are standing by their country with a steady courage and devotion to duty that should inspire the Nation with pride and patriotism and loyalty. Some of them are now facing death for their people, are participating in the great battles in Europe to make the world safe for Democracy, to insure our own safety and to vindicate our honor. We who remain here in peace and safety must surely do our part.

The Liberty Loan of 1917 was authorized for the purpose of, and its proceeds are being spent in arming, equipping, supplying and caring for the soldiers of the United States and to assist our Allies who are fighting by their side in France. In supporting the Liberty Loan the people of America are supporting our soldiers are standing behind the men behind the guns. We should support our soldiers with all our means, all of our resources, all of the combined might and power of the great, nation that we are.

Water Horses With Care

Animal Responds to Careful Treatment Here as Elsewhere.

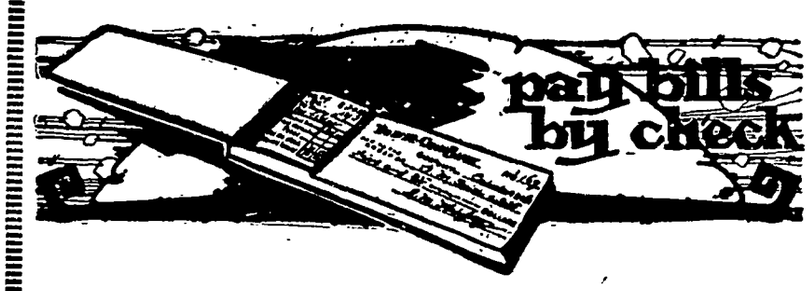
Use the same judgment in watering the horses when hot that you do in watering yourself, advises the animal husbandry men at Iowa State college. The oftener a horse is watered during the hot weather the better, as long as frequent watering can be practiced regularly. An animal accustomed to a certain time of watering should not be subjected to a sudden change. Very warm horses that have been without water for half a day should be made to drink slowly and not allowed too much before feeding They should not be fed without watering however, as it is likely to affect their appetites. Cool, fresh water is as much better than warm, stale water for a horse as it is for a man.

The thing to do under ordinary farm conditions is to adopt a reasonable, convenient system of watering and then follow this system regularly and with judgment.

MUCH PUREBRED STOCK GOING TO STATE FAIR

The extraordinary conditions prevailing in the live stock industry presage another record-breaking show of purebred stock at the coming state fair. There never was quite such a general and widespread interest in purebred animals of all kinds as there is at the present time, nor was the breeding industry ever resting upon more stable foundations. The outlook is rosy enough to please the most pessimistic, and the gospel of pure blood is being spread to the farthest corners of the country.

Iowa is not only what might be called the geographical center of the great meat-producing territory, but breeders of the state own more purebred horses, cattle and swine by far than those of any other state in the Union. No other state fair is so popular with breeders, and no other state fair even pretends to put on a stock show to compare with the magnificent displays of priceless animals to be seen each year at the Iowa Fair.



Needless to say that the First National Bank is interested in the progress of each and every farmer in this vicinity. Its own welfare depends almost entirely upon the welfare of Mr. Farmer, and we are glad to be so closely associated with such a reliable and substantial class of people. When in Klemme for business or pleasure make your headquarters at the First National Bank.

Flies are More Dangerous Than You Think

Flies breed so fast it is difficult to stamp them out. But, at least, we can keep them out of our houses.

And we ought to keep them out—not only for our comfort, but for our health. Many people don't realize what great disease-carriers flies are. They often come laden with disease germs directly to our food.

Screen the house and porches well and you prevent disease. Also you add to your comfort and peace of mind.

It does not cost much to screen a house. Let us screen your house.

Special glasses have been produced for shielding the eyes from harmful radiations, including the ultra-violet and the infra-red or heat rays, and their efficiency has been tested by the United States bureau of standards. Black amber, green, greenish-yellow spectacles of white crown glass give some protection from mercury—in quartz lamps and electric arcs between iron, copper, or carbon—such lights having an abundance of rays in the extreme ultra violet, with a scarcity in the infra-red. Black, yellowish green, sage green, goldplated and bluish green glasses are best for protecting from infra-red rays. When considerable light is needed in working near furnaces of molten iron or glass, the infra-red may be sufficiently filtered out by glasses of bluish green, or sage green. Where the light is very intense, as in working, molten quartz, or operating oxy-acetylene or electric welding apparatus or searchlights, ultra-violet, visible and infra-red radiation must be obstructed by the darkest glasses that can be used—black, green or goldplated, or yellowish green. Of the infra-red rays from a furnace heated to 1,000 degrees to 1,100 degrees C., it was found that about 99 per cent were cut out by goldplated glasses, 96 per cent by sagegreen or bluish green, 60 to 80 per cent by very deep black, and 60 per cent by greenish yellow.

Exclusive turkey ranches are found in the unsettled foothill regions of California and in parts of Arizona and other western states, where 1,000 or more turkeys are raised each season. The establishments are located where the range is unlimited and the natural food for the turkey, such as grasshoppers and other insects, green vegetables and the seeds of various weeds and grasses, is abundant. Advantage also is taken on these ranches of the turkey's relish for acorns, and where these are plentiful but little grain need be used for fattening in the fall. The large flocks of turkeys are managed much like herds of sheep, being taken out to the range early in the morning and brought home to roost at night. They are herded during the day by men either on foot or on horseback, and by dogs especially trained for the work

Something like epoch making possibilities are foreseen in the new road skate now being tested, as it is believed to have special advantages for business in addition to being an attractive means of pleasure locomotion. The nine-inch wheels have pneumatic tires, run on ball-bearing, are controlled by automatic brakes, and instead of being placed at heel and toe, are set on opposite sides of the skate, with the inner wheel a little in advance of the other to aid in balancing and steering. Even on rough roads, the new skate is both noiseless and fast traveling

The debris of war has accumulated to such an extent in France that the government has decided to begin disposing of it without waiting for the end of hostilities. A commission has been appointed to inventory all the materials and equipment that have been discarded by the army and navy, to classify them and ascertain how they may be sold to the best advantage. The commission is asked also to determine where the second hand material may be used to best facilitate the economic revival in France after the war.

Once more a complaint that is heard frequently against American exporters has cropped up, coming this time from British East Africa. In reporting on trade opportunities there the United States consul at Mombasa writes: "Some exporters apparently think that all export trade must be conducted in the Spanish language, and their catalogues and correspondence coming to this market are printed and written in that language. Many languages are spoken in this territory, but Spanish is one that is never heard."

A tax of 20 per cent of the original selling price was placed on matches in Mexico July 1. This is in the form of a stamp tax, stamps to be affixed to each carton by the manufacturers. To protect the match industry a tax of one peso import duty has been placed on each metal lighter brought into Mexico after July 31. The metal lighters most of which operate on the old flint and steel principle, are widely used in Mexico and are manufactured in foreign countries.

The tick of a watch, two weeks after the death of Henry Geise, a Philadelphia cabinet maker, the Philadelphia Public Ledger does not explain how the watch kept ticking for two weeks—led to the discovery of a cabinet in which were bank books showing large deposits, a paidup life insure policy, stock certificates and jewelry.

In spite of the absence of specific allusion to glass in the sacred writings the Hebrews probably were aware of the invention, which, perhaps, dates back to the time of Joseph, 3,500 years ago.

Though rats invest the filthy places and breathe foul air they are naturally cleanly and always have a shiny coat. They take pains to keep themselves clean, licking their paws like a cat.

Mamo is the name of a beautiful bird of the Hawaiian islands, now believed to be extinct, having been destroyed for the sake of its golden yellow feathers, used in former days to decorate the state robes of chiefs.

Rats' teeth are long and sharp. This enables them to gnaw hard substances such as bone and ivory for the gelatine that is in them. Rat skins are largely used for glove making.

AGENTS ROUNDING UP GERMAN DISTURBERS

Des Moines Attorney Held and Home Raided—Other Arrests Likely.

Des Moines, Ia., Aug. 4.—The tearing down of German propaganda in Iowa continued today. Federal agents were busy in half-a dozen towns questioning suspected persons, and making arrests.

Here in Des Moines, D. T. Blodgett, an attorney, is held for federal agents under $5,000 bail, charged with violation of the espionage act. Agents raided a print shop and two residences, one the home of Blodgett.

Thousands of pamphlets containing a speech made by Thomas Watson in Georgia last June against the conscription act were confiscated. Further arrests are expected today.

At Davenport federal agents continued investigation of the propaganda which yesterday resulted in the indictment of Daniel H. Wallace, of Chicago, and six prominent residents of Davenport. The local men pleaded not guilty and were released on $2,000 bonds. Wallace is still in jail, being unable to furnish $10,000 in bond money. Here, too, other arrests are expected.

Following the arrest of William Goldsmith, of Clarence, Ia., and five residents of Lowden, Ia., yesterday, reports indicate that the activity of the federal agents has put a quietus on pro-German radicalism in Linn county.

William Reichmann, one of the men arrested at Lowden, when taken to Cedar Rapids begged permission of United States Marshal Healy to shoot himself. He said he was disgraced and could not again face his friends. Relatives have been notified to watch him.

Reports from Lowden said that everything was quiet there today. The four wealthy citizens arrested yesterday returned from Cedar Rapids, where they waived preliminary hearing and were bound over to the grand jury with bail set at $5,000. The jury meets in October. United States Marshal Moore's warning not to congregate on the streets seems to be heeded. The usual "war councils" are not on the streets of Lowden today.

Greetings on the streets were in English today instead of German. William Goldsmith, who was arrested yesterday was released on $5,000 bond.

IMPROVEMENT OF LEMARS HOSPITAL IS POSTPONED

LeMars, Ia., Aug. 4.—Sisters of St. Frances, of Dubuque, today assumed the management of the LeMars general hospital. When purchasing the hospital from Drs. G. H. Mammen and Roy Bellaire last spring, the Sisters of St. Frances announced that work on the construction of a large modern hospital here would probably be started this fall. The structure was to have been erected on a six-acre tract, purchased by the diocese for a hospital some years ago. Rev. Mgr. W. A. Pape announced today that work on the proposed new hospital will not be started this year. Rev. Mgr. Pape said that the unsettled condition of the building materials market made it inadvisable to enter upon the building program at this time. Besides the site, the Catholic church here has $11,000 in its hospital fund. A part of the money with which to erect the new building was to have been raised by popular subscription

LEMARS REFUSES TO PAY WHEN OTHER CITIES FAIL

LeMars, Ia., Aug. 4.—Because of LeMars Commercial club would not hand over $300 which it had collected here to further the Washington national highway this city will have to struggle along with just "roads" on which to travel. Representing the Washington national highway executive committee C. A. Wilson and G. H. Bishop, of Omaha, arrived here yesterday. Mr. Wilson and Mr. Bishop reminded members of the Commercial club that in return for having the Washington national highway routed through LeMars, this city had agreed to donate $300 to the corporation. Commercial club officers recalled that Sioux City and Sioux Falls also were to have paid for the privilege of being on the highway. Communication with Sioux City and Sioux Falls elicited the fact that neither city had raised a fund for the highway. Three hundred dollars which the LeMars Commercial club collected for the project, remains in a bank. Mr. Wilson and Mr. Bishop declared that the highway would be diverted.

IOWA'S INVENTION MAY REVOLUTIONIZE AIR WAR

Iowa City, Ia., Aug. 4.—One of the most important contributions yet made by science to national armament is the perfection of a device whereby airplanes may be located to within one degree by their sound

This important invention has been worked out by a small committee of the national research council of which Prof. C. W. Stewart, head of the department of physics of the State University of Iowa, is head.

During the latter part of May and the first of June this committee spent several weeks at one of the naval stations perfecting the invention, but the whole like many other inventions, has been kept secret and only by the announcement in the report of the national research council was it made public

PROTOTYPE OF HUCK FINN STILL LIVING

Youth Reported Drowned Is Alive—Spent Night in Old Barn.

Boone, Ia., Aug. 4.—John Zura won the breathing contest!

Zura is a resident of Kenosha, Wis., but he attends the biblical college at Boone. With three fellow students he went swimming Tuesday in the Des Moines river.

One of the four suggested a breathing contest to determine which could remain under the surface of the water the longest and it was accordingly staked.

The other three bobbed their heads above the surface at varying intervals, but Zura did not reappear. His frightened companions dove repeatedly for him and finally returned with the report that he had drowned.

A search for his body was instituted without success.

Yesterday Zura walked into the college in a perfectly live condition and claimed the record.

He says he struck his chest on a rock as he went down and was rendered unconscious. He floated down stream for some distance before regaining his senses, then caught on the limb of a tree, where he hung for more than an hour.

Since his clothes were some distance up the river and he was in an exhausted condition, he spent the night in a nearby barn.

IOWA HONEY CROP CUT SHORT, EXPERTS REPORT

Buck Grove, Ia., Aug. 4.—Iowa's honey crop this year, at least for this portion of the state, will be materially reduced. According to A. F. Bonney, a local honey producer. The honey yield has been reduced fully 75 per cent. The belated clover crop has been cut short by the dry, hot weather, giving the bees only about three weeks to gather their store of sweets. The quality, however will be unusually good.

NO PROFIT IN FEEDING $2 CORN TO $15 HOGS

Remsen, Ia., Aug. 4.—Farmers are in a quandary about the future of the livestock industry, especially hog raising. There is a serious question about the advisability of feeding $2 corn to $15 hogs. Many maintain that it cannot be done and that the price of hogs will have to be advanced or the price of corn reduced. Many farmers are reported to be shipping their younger stock, believing that there is more money in selling their corn at present prices than feeding it. Others are inclined to wait the action of the food commissioner in the matter of fixing maximum and minimum prices

MANUFACTURERS COMPLAIN OF SHORTAGE OF CREAM

Cedar Rapids, Ia., Aug. 4.—For period of perhaps 30 days there will be no flavoring used in ice cream in this city, except vanilla.

Manufacture of ice cream with any flavoring has been discontinued by the leading manufacturers. The making of colored ice cream was stopped by some dealers Saturday and today nothing but vanilla cream could be purchased

The very unusual situation is the result of an unprecedented shortage of dairy cream. Dealers are able to get quantities of cream from the dairies in considerable less amounts than they have demand for

In making several flavors of ice cream in one machine the mixer must be cleaned between each batch, work which requires a great deal of time. With the shortage of raw material it would mean the cleaning of the mixer for every few gallons of cream made. Hence the use of one flavor

Indianapolis, Ind., Aug. 2.—The official list of registrants of Marion county, outside of Indianapolis, was stolen from the office of Hugh McLandon, chairman of the exemption board, some time last night. The theft was reported when McLandon notified State Conscription Agent Eschbach and also appealed to federal authorities. German agents are blamed for the theft.

ARRESTS FOLLOW SERIOUS GERMAN RIOT AT LOWDEN

Federal Agents Round Up Teutons, Following Threat to Lynch State's Attorney McGilvray.

MOB IS FORMED IN TOWN

Cool Heads Prevail Upon Irate Leaders to Desist—Numerous Threats Are Made at Davenport.

Cedar Rapids, Ia., Aug. 3.—The United States deputies and the federal agents left today for Lowden to put down a near insurrection by the German population in that district. They threatened with violence those who had made the arrest of Rev. John Reichart.

When Reichart was arrested the federal agents took him to the office of Attorney Dan McGillivary. The fact that McGillivary aided in questioning the minister angered the pro-German population of Lowden.

A mob formed last night and but for the intervention of cooler citizens McGillivary would have undoubtedly been attacked

More Arrests Made.

As the culmination of the series of demonstrations against measures adopted by the United States for the prosecution of the war against Germany, Albert Schaeffer, age 65, retired farmer, William Reichman, aged 65, a furniture dealer, Ernest Meier aged 65, retired farmer, and Carl Goble, aged 36, a farmer, were this morning arrested at Lowden by United States Marshal Moore and Deputy Marshal Healy on charges of treason.

Whether they will be interned at Cedar Rapids or released on their own recognizance is to be determined.

Loyal Citizens Aroused

All reports agree that Lowden has been a veritable hot bed of sedition. The local Lutheran minister being at liberty under bonds on charges of treasonable utterances.

Some time since the Lowden postmaster was reproved officially for lack of respect shown to the American flag.

Feeling there has become very bitter. Loyal Americans are in a mood to stop what they consider aiding American troops in the war and the prosecution of active operations on Iowa soil in behalf of Germany. Officials hope that today's arrests will serve to restore order.

Some Blows Were Struck.

Five others questioned by federal operatives are likely to be placed under arrest. Following the arrests, the officers called this town a hotbed of sedition, and county agents were ordered to use force if necessary. Those arrested were specifically charged with threatening to lynch Daniel D. McGillvray. A few blows were struck but cooler heads advised that they let the attorney alone.

Preacher's Son in Army.

According to the federal agents, Richmann has a son in the national guard and is said to have remarked that he would sooner see his offspring dead than carrying arms against the kaiser's army. The government agents came at the request of loyal citizens who feared serious trouble unless some pro-Germans were taken into custody.

The mayor of Lowden, Lewis L. Loellje, is a German who insists that he is loyal to the United States. He said he knew of the trouble Tuesday, but that he did not take steps to prevent further trouble. He was warned to stop all future disorder. According to loyal Germans and Americans, the trouble started when the pro-Germans alleged that German flags were dragged in the dust during a Fourth of July celebration.

THREATS AT DAVENPORT.

Davenport, Ia., Aug. 3.—The federal grand jury returned indictments in the Daniel H. Wallace case. The secret service men are out in search of evidence connected with the threatening letters received by several prominent business men here. Several other homes, the names of which have been withheld, in addition to that of N. D. Ely, have received threatening letters. N. D. Ely has been an active agent in the Wallace propaganda.

Dr. Henry Matthey and his nephew, Dr. Walter Matthey, were also indicted on charges of conspiracy. Dr. Henry Matthey went to Europe soon after the war broke out there and served for two years in the German army as a surgeon.

Indictments returned today included Daniel H. Wallace, Fred Volmer, E. C. Willis, Charles Wiese and A. H. Miller, together with a prominent citizen of Davenport, who has not yet been apprehended, on a charge of conspiracy, and abetting violation of the espionage law. Fred Vollmer is a brother of former Congressman Henry Vollmer.

All those arrested here were arraigned immediately and pleaded not guilty. The Wallace bond was fixed at $10,000. Other prisoners' bonds were fixed at $2,000. All say they will furnish bond Monday.

That Daniel H. Wallace served in the British army but one month and never on the continent and that most of his experiences related are fabrications, is the claim of federal officers.

Another sensation was caused when Judge Martin J. Wade, in his instructions to the grand jury, stated that if Wallace were found guilty and that if it was found that any one procured his services to come here and speak with a knowledge of what he would say, he was just as guilty as Wallace himself.

Court convened at 10 o'clock Tuesday morning. The purpose was to hear the case of Daniel Wallace, founder of the League of Humanity, who delivered an address at the Turner Grand opera house last Wednesday night, during the course of which he is alleged to have made statements that would interfere with the draft law.

Not in Texas Rangers.

According to the reports from the department of justice, Wallace himself on one occasion admitted that he had never been in the United States cavalry or a lieutenant in the Texas rangers. In his book he claims to have been a lieutenant in the Texas rangers and was about to be made captain when the war department decided to place West Point officers in charge.

GERMAN PREACHER IS ACCUSED OF TREASON

Rev. John Reichart Is Arrested and Held Under $5,000 Bond —Others Sought.

Cedar Rapids, Ia., Aug. 3.—Federal agents are investigating treason charges against several persons following the arrest of Rev. John Reichart, minister of the German Evangelical church of Lowden. Reichert was bound over to the federal grand jury but released on $5,000 bond.

Fred Shellin, a wealthy farmer living near Lowden, was also arrested but released upon the promise to "keep his tongue in his head."

Rev. Reichart declared to United States Commissioner Harwood, who was conducting the preliminary hearing that Germany was being falsified and that it was his duty to defend her. His pulpit utterances are said to have been openly traitorous.

ENDEAVOR TO PROMOTE CONSUMPTION OF CHEESE

Ames, Ia., Aug. 3.—To arouse interest among Iowa dairy and creamery men and among the people in adopting a program of "cheese once a week," 15 state dairy and food inspectors are studying methods of soft cheese making at Iowa State college for two days. There men, in close touch with dairies, creamerymen and consumers, will undoubtedly be able to arouse more interest in cheese consumption and production in Iowa.

"When it is considered that Iowa produces but 10 per cent of the cheese she consumes it is time more cheese was made in the state," says M. Mortensen, head of the dairy department at Iowa State college. "An absolute saving would result in making soft cheese in many market milk plants and ice cream plants in Iowa, while it would be a step toward household economy to make more soft cheese at home and on the farm."

GREAT PATRIOTIC RALLY AT SHELDON YESTERDAY

Sheldon, Ia., Aug. 3.—A great patriotic celebration was held here yesterday and funds were raised for the mess fund of the national guard troops quartered here. Rain threatened the proceedings, but held off until the celebration was over and the soldier lads were put on a good cake and pie basis from the profits derived therefrom.

The opening event was a drill by the guard unit, which showed the troops have profited by their two weeks of training. The principal address was delivered by Justice Stevens of the Iowa state supreme court who was introduced by Judge Boies, of Sheldon.

A hotly contested ball game between teams representing Sioux and O'Brien counties was played. The Sioux county team won by a score of 2 to 1. Batteries were for Sioux, Bell and McGraw, for O'Brien, Wenig and Loucks.

WOMEN NOW EMPLOYED IN MILWAUKEE CAR SHOPS

Dubuque, Ia., Aug. 3. Officials of the Milwaukee railroad here, anticipating a shortage of men after the draft, have begun employing women in the car shops. Already 14 women are employed and others will be added.

Clad in overalls and bumpers and nifty little dust caps, the women present a brisk and workmanlike appearance. They are employed in cleaning cars, dusting coaches, washing windows and preparing the coaches for the painters. They are not being assigned work too heavy for them.

These modern "willing workers" are not confined to one class of femininity. They comprise the young and middle aged, married and single, blondes and brunets. A private compartment has been fitted up as a dressing room and shop officials have announced that undignity and disrespect toward the women will not be tolerated and that anyone guilty of such conduct will be summarily discharged.

In the near future a building will be erected containing rest rooms, cloak rooms, dressing rooms and all the modern comforts and conveniences appreciated by women.

STRONG GAS WELL IS DEVELOPED AT HERNDON

Perry, Ia., Aug. 3.—The strongest flow of gas ever found in Iowa rewarded the efforts of the Interstate Gas and Oil company, when it completed a well on the Anton Leber farm near Herndon a few days ago. The boom is again on at Herndon and the officers of the company are jubilant, for they feel that their work has been a success.

Gravel, rock and sand was thrown over 100 feet in the air and the roar which accompanied the striking of gas was terrific. Considerable excitement prevails in the community.

"We had faith and the Lord was good to us," said T. M. Parks, who has been piloting the fortunes of the company for the past two years, when questioned about the well this morning. "This is but one of a string of wells which will be sunk before the year wanes, and another will be down before the week ends, barring accidents."

MAN, WIFE AND SON ARE DROWNED NEAR PELLA, IA.

Pella, Ia., Aug. 3.—Searching parties today are draining the nearby lake for the body of Prof. Peter Groetveld, who was drowned there, together with his wife and son Robert, aged 14. The bodies of the wife and son were recovered last night. There were no eye witnesses of the tragedy, but it is believed that the father and son lost their lives in the attempt to rescue Mrs. Groetveld, who was not an expert swimmer. The sand dredges in some parts of the lake made it dangerous for a weak swimmer. Professor Groetveld, who was 50 years old, was a music teacher and director here. He came from Holland about nine years ago.

HUSBAND LOSES LIFE IN TRYING TO RESCUE WIFE

Hampton, Ia., Aug. 3.—Mrs. Fred Rabe, of Chicago, who was visiting at Alta Vista, went with a party of friends to the Cedar river for an outing. While wading Mrs. Rabe stepped into a deep hole. Mr. Rabe's body was recovered within a few hours.

GERMAN NAVY FEARS SUB WAR OPPONENT

Von Reventlow Says Von Kuhlman, as Foreign Minister, Would Cause Discord.

Copenhagen, Aug. 4.—The prospect of Dr Richard von Kuhlman, German ambassador to Turkey, being appointed foreign secretary is highly unpleasant to Count von Reventlow, who in a pungent article in the Tages Zeitung arraigns him for high crimes as an Anglophile opponent of submarine warfare

Count von Reventlow says that Dr von Kuhlman in the antebellum days was the leading protagonist of a policy of understanding with England at the expense of German sea power, and as minister to The Hague he endeavored to prevent submarine warfare by warnings of warlike complications with Holland. Dr von Kuhlman the article declares, would, as foreign secretary render harmonious cooperation between the foreign office and the navy on submarines out of the question

There is little doubt according to the belief expressed here that Count von Reventlow in this article is speaking for the navy circles

It was stated that former Foreign Secretary Zimmermann admitted this when pressed very closely as to Germany's foreknowledge of the action of her ally which precipitated the Euro-

Said She Didn't Know.

Germany has maintained that she was not consulted by Austria as to the ultimatum which practically denied Serbia's independence and that she did not even have knowledge of the step.

Foreign Secretary Zimmermann's admission, however, is interpreted here to show that Germany had full knowledge of the note in time to stop action on it if she felt it essential. Her inaction, however, is felt to have proved her an accomplice of Austria, whom she had already told she would support in any decision she might make.

This fact fits very closely with the recent statements first advanced by Deputy Cohn in the reichstag and since adopted by the allied governments, that German and Austrian leaders held a war council at Potsdam on July 5, in which it was practically decided to plunge Europe into conflict. The interpretation placed on this council has been that Germany had full knowledge of all Austria's plans and stood unreservedly behind her

Germany however, has repeatedly denied the holding of such a conference

Amsterdam, Aug. 4.—Russia and Austria are "on the verge of an understanding," according to a declaration attributed to President Huyseman of the international socialist bureau in today's Handelsblad.

"Austria" he said, "is not claiming anything from Russia. The Polish question is to be considered a matter between Russia and Germany"

Amsterdam, Aug 4 -Count von Reventlow, in an article in the Tages Zeitung, referring to Arthur J Balfour's speech in the house of commons, in which he spoke of the nationalists of Austria-Hungary determining their own course of future development, tells his readers of widespread machinations of American agents in Austria-Hungary, started by former Ambassador Penfield, long prior to the Austro-American breach.

The article says that Americans who left Austria soon after the breach, talk confidently to neutrals of "impending complete political isolation of Germans in Austria, while in Hungary also secret organization of entente nations and America soon would bear fruit." Both predictions have been fulfilled, says Count von Reventlow, who darkly adds

"How long the former ambassador to Constantinople, Elkus, remained in Vienna, or whether he is still there we do not know"

"Balfour's idea," says Count Reventlow, "is the dissolution of the Austro-Hungarian monarchy, which squares exactly with the aims of the Czech Poles."

London, Aug. 3.—Emperor Charles, of Austria, received in audience Dr Michaelis, the German imperial chancellor, on Thursday, says a dispatch from Amsterdam to the Central News agency.

YOUNGER GENERATION OF JAPS TOO FEEBLE

Tokio, Aug. 3.—Interpellating the government about the health of the nation Baron Kenkwan Takagi, a well known medico scientist, speaking in the house of peers, declared that there was a gradual enfeeblement in the physique of the young men which was discouraging. He asked whether the government was considering any measures for the improvement of the health conditions of the empire.

In reply, Premier Count Terauchi said the government was not satisfied with the present national hygiene and would adopt all possible measures to bring about an improvement.

Washington, Aug. 3.—President Wilson, in a letter to Representative Dyer, of Missouri, today reiterated his confidence in the loyalty of the great body of American citizens of German blood.

Admiral Who Threw Sword Overboard When Sailors Mutinied, Gets It Back

(By United Press.)

Petrograd, Aug. 4.—Admiral Kolchack got his sword back today, the same sword he threw overboard at Sebastopol rather than turn it over to mutinous sailors. The sailors, thoroughly repentent, succeeded with the aid of divers in regaining the sword, and sent a delegation to Petrograd to return it to the admiral.

At the time of the mutiny, the sailors' anger was quelled by Rear Admiral Glennon, of the American navy. Admiral Kolchack was ordered to surrender. He declared that when forced to capitulate at Port Arthur, that the Japs had allowed him to keep his sword and he would keep it unsullied. Then he threw it overboard.

WOODS TO QUIT RUMORS ASSERT

Fifth District Congressman to Resign Committee Job Following Revelations, Is Report.

Webster City, Ia., Aug 4. Much political gossip has been started in the Fifth congressional district of Iowa by a story printed in the Chicago Tribune to the effect that Frank P Woods, chairman of the republican congressional campaign committee soon will resign According to the Tribune's story his resignation will result from disclosures concerning the handling of finances in the last campaign.

A transcript of the evidence given before the investigating committee of five republican congressmen and copy of a report made by them, both of which have been obtained by the Chicago Tribune show some startling alleged facts in regard to the inside details of managing a political campaign.

The investigating committee brought out, for instance, that $60,000 was paid two men—John W Connor and W. N. Hudiburg—for collecting a large part of the $380,000 campaign fund raised by the committee to be spent in the election of republican congressmen. Connor and Hudiburg earned this sum in a little less than six months, from about the first of June until the last of November.

Of the rest of the money raised by the committee only about $130,000, or one-third of the total amount, was actually sent to various congressional districts for campaign purposes. The rest was spent at Washington for expenses of members of the committee, getting out literature and other minor things.

While there was no evidence that there was any irregularity in the action of the committee or of any of its members, it is probable that Frank P. Woods, chairman of the committee will resign, along with Congressman R. W Austin, of Tennessee, who was chairman of the finance committee of the congressional committee.

The investigation committee found that Chairman Woods and Representative Austin were blameless and that no charges of corruption or graft could lie against these men.

CENTRAL ALLIES ASSURED FOOD

Rumanian Crop Will Furnish 100,000 Car Loads, Saving People, Vienna Paper Says.

Zurich, Aug 4.—The Vienna Neue Freie Presse, in estimating the world's harvest for the year says that Rumania, after supplying the needs of her home population and of the Austrian and German armies, will be able to send 100,000 carloads of cereals to Germany and Austria-Hungary.

The newspaper admits that grain in Germany and Austria-Hungary has suffered from the heat and drought but considers that the harvest will be an average one except as to barley, the crop of which will be poor

Taking the harvest as a whole the Neue Freie Presse declares the supply of breat flour and potatoes for the fourth year of the war is assured, although hard times will be experienced until the new flour is put on the market.

BRITAIN PRAISES GOMPERS' STAND

Says Refusal of American Labor to Participate in Conference Should End MacDonald's Cringing.

London, Aug. 4.—The cable message from Samuel Gompers, head of the American Federation of Labor, to M. Jouhaux, of the general federation of labor, and W. A. Appleton, of the general federation of trade unions, refusing to participate in the international socialist conference, is welcomed by the Post. In an editorial the Post describes Mr. Gomper's message as admirable in sense and delivered wtih admirable emphasis, adding

"Once again the allies have to thank America for timely lead. * * * * While our ministers have not the courage to act on their conviction Gompers has * * * Assuredly an international conference without America would be too feeble to justify any further cringing to Ramsay McDonald and his confederates."

STARVING WOMEN AND CHILDREN RESCUED

Alone on Island, Negro Terrorized Party Until Beaten to Death.

Mexico City, Mex., Aug. 4.—The story of the rescue of 11 Mexican women and children from probable death on the barren Clipperton island, 650 miles off the Mexican coast, was related today by members of the rescued party, who were landed at Salina Cruz by an American gunboat. They were the survivors of more than 100 colonists who left for the island in February, 1914. The remainder died from scurvy or were drowned.

The party on the island then numbered five women, seven children and a negro lighthouse tender. The women lived in constant terror of the negro, who continually threatened them. He murdered one of the women, but another woman, unable longer to bear his outrageous conduct, beat out the man's brains with a hammer. The small party was in a precarious state when the gunboat arrived and took them off the island.

CAN'T SELL OWN FOOD AND BUY FROM U. S.

Washington, Aug. 4.—Full information concerning food conditions in the northern European neutral countries has been asked of the neutrals by the United States in notes handed to their diplomatic representatives here.

The intention of the United States is to hold exports to the neutrals to the barest necessities to prevent American foodstuffs or food they replace from reaching Germany. Only actual food deficiencies will be made up from America and assurances will be demanded that no American produced food is reexported or used to supplant food that is exported.

Quick responses to the notes are looked for, since at present no shipments to the neutrals are permitted to leave American ports, and some of the countries are badly in need of grains.

U. S. NAVY "BONE DRY;" SOLDIERS DRINK COFFEE

Base of American Flotillas in British Waters, Aug. 3.—Black coffee is the popular drink with the men over here in Uncle Sam's teetotal navy. Steaming hot coffee is always on tap on board the destroyers when they are out looking for submarines. The men say it not only keeps them awake but serves also as a stimulent and protector against the rigorous climatic conditions under which they labor. They have not yet carried on board ship the afternoon tea habit which they have formed ashore and found such a satisfactory substitute for the use of alcoholic drinks.

RESISTANCE IN THE SOUTH

Mountaineers and Others Arm to Fight When Orators Declare That Draft Is Unconstitutional.

Oklahoma City, Okla., Aug. 4.—Appeals for assistance in quelling a mob of alleged draft resisters were received by Governor Williams this afternoon from Wewoka, Seminole county.

Ada, Okla., Aug. 4.—The first violence against the draft has broken out in Seminole county and is spreading here and through Pontotoc county. The Frisco bridge at Francis has been dynamited and burned by a mob.

The mob is composed mostly of tenant farmers, including many negroes, and is marching on Sasakwa, reckoning to storm hardware stores there for more arms. All members of the mob are heavily armed. Along the march they are recruiting their ranks.

Two boys who escaped from the mob report that a dream of a revolution is inspiring the rioters. They talk of the Russian revolution, the boys say, and say that the time has come for a revolution here. The boys made the statements to County Attorney Bullock. The slackers are threatening all those who refuse to join them.

An alleged anti-draft organization calling itself the Working Class union, is said to be scattered in Seminole county, where the shooting and bridge damage occurred.

A quantity of dynamite also was exploded on the Missouri Pacific bridge near Gore, Okla.

RESISTANCE IN SOUTH.

By the United Press.

Washington, Aug. 4. — Reports of armed resistance to the draft in isolated places in Georgia and North Carolina are being investigated by the department of justice. Mountaineers and farmers are reported to be supplying themselves with rifles and ammunition to fight the draft. Special agents are making a careful inquiry and stern measures will be taken.

The reports came from the internal revenue agents, and were immediately transmitted to the department of justice. Speakers are said to be touring the mountains and rural sections, declaring the draft law unconstitutional, and advising resistance.

SAYS UNDESIRABLES THRONG DES MOINES

Mayor McVicar Demands That Police Get Busy and Clean Up City.

Des Moines, Ia., Aug. 4.—Mayor John MacVicar, charging that lewd women, gamblers and dive keepers are flocking to Des Moines, to take advantage of soldiers who will be here at the cantonment, today demanded of the police that they clean up Des Moines.

Although Superintendent Woolgar of the public safety department, asserts that Des Moines is cleaner than ever, the mayor asserts that he has a collection of startling facts relative to laxness on the part of the police and a constant freeing of women who have been caught in raids only to be turned loose at the police station.

The Senate was not in session today, but probably will take up the conference report on the control bill tomorrow. It is expected to act favorably on the report, although there will be opposition to accepting some of the compromises effected by the conferees.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

Breakfast foods should be cheap this year; Iowa is raising a good hay crop.

As usual there are a few Fords stolen every week, but who wants to steal a poor "Lizzy"?

The Marshalltown Times-Republican remarks that when the girls flock to the colors, the color is usually olive drab.

Now the Russ women have entered the war, that's nothing, lots of American women are continually at war in their own homes.

Texas has some governor; last week he was indicted on a charge of misapplication of public funds and embezzlement. Roust 'im out.

The Cedar Rapids baseball club has dropped out of the Central Association. They were at the tail end in per centages, that solves it.

The Thornton Enterprise remarks that the bathing suit joke is not much heard from this year as there isn't enough left of it to crack a joke on.

The slackers are being rounded up and their names will be placed at the head of the draft list. That's good medicine for those that failed to register.

The Clear Lake Commercial Club have written in to headquarters at Washington and are trying to get an aviation camp located there. We suggest that they apply for a submarine base.

Iowa now leads the United States in the number of consolidated schools according to a report from the office of Allen Deyoe, state superintendent of public instruction. Iowa now has 235 consolidated schools.

Boone and Fort Dodge have been having considerable dispute as to which city was entitled to the honor of having the heaviest baby in the state at the time of birth. Now we hear of a baby born at Shenandoah, weighing eighteen pounds at it's birth, this beats the record by two pounds. "Some baby."

The Mesquakie Indians at Tama, are going to pull off a grand powwow from August 4 to August 12, on the banks of the Iowa river near Tama. They will give Indian songs and dances in the good old style of days gone by. Of course other tribes will be there to help in the pow-wow They are planning on having the time of their life.

Another new military unit for Iowa. This time it will be a baker's regiment. One hundred and one bakers will be organized for this new unit, to supply bread daily to 1800 men. The company will consist of one 1st lieutenant, one 2nd lieutenant, one 1st sergeant, twenty-three sergeants, fifteen corporals, forty-five first-class privates, fifteen privates and two cooks. As soon as the company is organized it will be sent to Fort Riley for technical training.

Now is the time to swat the fly. Flies carry disease and every fly you catch or kill will mean that millions of harmful germs are killed also, that may mean the saving of a human life. Keep exposed food well covered and away from flies; keep garbage cans well covered and dispose of the contents as soon as possible; don't allow manure to accumulate in the back yard, haul it away. Keep things sanitary, swat the fly and the result is that there will be less disease.

State Fairs Volunteer As Food Training Camps

eryone of the absolute necessity of producing more food and wasting less of it," said Mr. Hoover today. "The large fairs offer a wonderful opportunity of doing this in an efficient manner, and I am certain that great results will come from it."

The action taken in naming the Iowa State Fair as a Food Training Camp is the result of a conference of prominent fair officials from all parts of the United States, at which the services of the larger fairs were tendered to the government.

"Because of the importance of this great movement, and the possibilities offered by the Food Training Camp in assisting the government in its food conservation work, I believe that the fairs should organize a special Bureau at Washington to co-operate with my department and other government departments in helping to bring the war to a successful conclusion," said Mr. Hoover at the close of the conference.

This bureau will be established at Washington at once, with Ray P. Speer, Publicity Manager of the American Association of Fairs and Expositions, in charge. The bureau will work out plans, in co-operation with the government, by which the great food problems and their solution can be presented to the American people in the most satisfactory way.

It is not definitely known what lines this work will follow. This remains to be worked out; but it is probable that a series of exhibits and demonstrations will be placed at the different fairs by the government. A conference is to be held in Washington on this matter some time this week.

This is the first time in history that the national government has co-operated with the fairs of the country in a general way, or has attempted to make use of them in an official way.

Buster Brown Was Here!

The boys and girls of Klemme were given a rare treat Monday afternoon when "Buster Brown" came to town and made his headquarters at the Wellemeyer store. Buster first explained to the boys and girls why they should wear "Buster Brown" shoes, then they were entertained by a short program by Buster and his wonderful dog, Tige, this was not all Buster is a good friend of the boys and girls and he gave them all souvenirs consisting of school rulers, badges, mirrors and crickets. The kiddos are all wishing that Buster and Tige will come again soon.

Some of Mason City's "sud swallowers" became quite thirsty recently and so to Minnesota they went to quench their thirst and to bring some suds back to the city with them for future thirst quenchers. To get the booze back over the line was a mystery to solve, but not too deep for the Mason City boys. They grasped an idea; a hearse was hired, filled with booze, and then the procession moved on unmolested past the lines, the officers took one look at the sad faces of the "mourners," shed a tear or two in their behalf and let them by. How is that for putting one over on the cops?

OBITUARY

NICHOLAS REESE

Born September 12th, 1841.
Died July 22nd, 1917.

N. Reese was a native of Schenectady county, New York, the fourth in a family of nine children born to Jacob and Eliza (Cantley) Reese. He lived at home on the farm until he had attained his majority, receiving in the meantime a common school education. When he was about sixteen years old, the family moved to Dekalb county, Illinois, where he lived until 1865, when he emigrated to Hardin county, Iowa. There he obtained work as a farm hand, but later purchased land in Franklin county and improved it. This farm was located on the county line between Hardin and Franklin counties. He lived on this farm until 1881, when he sold out and removed to Belmond where he made his home until his death. He came to Belmond in the fall of 1881 and with J. C. Butterfield embarked in the hardware business. This partnership continued for three years, when Mr. Reese took over the entire business and operated it himself until 1908, when he turned the store over to his eldest son, Chas. N. Reese. On October 9, 1869, Mr. Reese was married in Franklin county to Miss Edwina C. Butterfield, a native of Cook county, Illinois. To this union were born four children, all of whom survive: Chas. N. of Belmond, Mrs. Ella Harris of Rowan, Mrs. Carrie Pabst of Klemme and Frank of Albert Lea, Minnesota. Five grandchildren survive, besides two brothers and one sister, the wife having departed this life several years ago. Deceased was identified with the Methodist Episcopal church and was an honored member of the Masonic fraternity, being also a member of the Order of the Eastern Star. His health has been poorly for the past few years and at different intervals he suffered severe attacks of ill health which only his rugged constitution enabled him to throw off. Just the week preceeding his death, he visited at the homes of his children in Rowan, Klemme and Albert Lea. At that time he seemed to be in fairly good health and while his final attack was considerable of a surprise, because of his advanced age, his death was not wholly unexpected. In the commercial life of Belmond and Wright county the name of Nicholas Reese occupies a conspicuous place, since he was one of the most prominent and representative men of this locality. Progressive, enterprising, and persevering, honorable, just and upright, his was a life of service to his family and to the community in which he lived. While he prospered in business, his life was a benefit to this locality and he was ever an influential factor in the moral, social and educational progress of this community.

HERE'S AN EXHIBIT THAT'S GOING TO MAKE A HIT WITH POULTRY GROWERS.

Tons and tons of advice—and that means a good deal, for much of it is pretty light—have been preached, peddled and promulgated of late concerning the poultry industry. Growers have been told that it is the simplest matter in the world to double their output of poultry and poultry products, and have been urged to DO IT NOW!

Some of the advice has been all right and some of it has been altogether rotten, as many a practical poultryman will cheerfully testify. Any man who uses his head for thinking purposes knows that the poultry output cannot be doubled, or even greatly increased, hot off the bat, and all such talk is pure bunk.

The average poultry grower in Iowa and other states is already producing to the capacity of his equipment, and to overdo the matter in poultry growing is to invite speedy disaster in a dozen ways—which is another fact the seasoned poultryman will swear to. This rule-of-the-tree system, attempting to grow poultry minus both experience and equipment, is plain business idiocy.

The duty of the hour is to properly care for the season's hatch. That is job enough for the present. Then if preparations are made next fall and winter, in the way of poultry houses and other equipment, next Spring the output CAN be doubled, or at least greatly increased. What Iowa needs today first of all is more and better poultry houses and modern equipment. Knowledge will come thru experience.

Mr. Joseph Dagle, President of the Iowa State Poultry Breeders' Association, which, by the way, is a branch of the American Poultry Association, believes that more satisfactory loads can be hauled if the horse is hitched before the cart instead of at the other end, as some over-enthusiastic persons would have it. He has worked out a plan in co-operation with the state fair management that is so practical and well-stocked with educational value that good results are certain to follow.

A modern sanitary poultry house and runs will be built near the Poultry Building. It will be fully equipped with incubators, brooders, hatching rooms, roosting rooms and all the rest of it, everything needful to carrying on the business after businesslike methods. A practical poultryman, one who knows the game in all its ramifications from fighting lice to banking the profits, will be in charge, ready at all times to explain, elucidate, demonstrate or do anything else asked for the enlightenment of the layman.

The plant itself will be constructed by the Permanent Building Society, which organization includes all the clay working plants in the state, brick, tile, block, terra cotta, etc. The plant will be equipped with appara

...s and stocked with poultry by the state Poultry Breeders' Association. It will be one of the most complete and practical exhibits ever put on for the benefit of state fair visitors, and will probably furnish more real information than a train load of literature and hot air. By all means go into the poultry business, but go into it right—and here will be the opportunity to learn the right way.

SEE THE CANNING DEMONSTRATIONS.

The Ames College building on the state fair grounds will be headquarters for the food conservation movement that has taken such a hold on everybody. For ten days the state fair grounds will be a great food efficiency camp of the most practical sort. Lecturers and expert demonstrators from Ames and Washington will be in charge to explain the newest and most efficient methods of preparing foodstuffs of all kind for future use.

The hot pack, the cold pack, sugared and sugarless methods of preserving, pickling, canning and drying, the entire list will be demonstrated every day of the fair. For some time past the government experts have been following a line of experimentation in dry-curing all kinds of vegetables. Their efforts have proved successful and the experts from Washington will exploit their newly-acquired and proven ideas at the fair.

The canning season has always been one of strenuous exertion and worry for the housewife, but the new methods employed have robbed it of its terrors. The housewife no longer has to kill herself off with the heat and strenuosity of it and then live in constant fear that everything she has "put up" will spoil. The world certainly "do move," in housekeeping arrangements as well as in other affairs, as the fair visitor will discover through the medium of these canning demonstrations.

COLLEGE BUILDING WILL BE CENTER OF INTEREST.

The Ames College Building will be a lively and interesting spot during the state fair. Expert demonstrators and lecturers from both Ames and Washington will hold forth there and exploit the newest and best methods of saving meats, vegetables and fruits for future use.

OBSERVE CHILDREN'S DAY.

Friday, August 24, will be Children's Day at the state fair. All the little folk under fifteen years admitted free, and the fair management would be pleased to see not less than fifty thousand of them swarming over the grounds.

GRAND OPERA SINGERS FOR THE STATE FAIR.

Lovers of good music who visit the Iowa State Fair this year will be given an unusual treat by the famous Thaviu Band and Grand Opera singers. This is one of the most noted and high-class musical organizations before the American public. They were selected above all others for both the opening and the closing ceremonies at the late Panama-Pacific Exposition, an honor by no means insignificant. They are in constant demand, dated months in advance, and the state fair management was fortunate in getting a contract for fair week.

All the favorite operas, old and new, will be rendered, as well as the popular vocal hits of the day. A company of versatile dancers is included in the organization, and the characteristic steps and dances of all nations will be presented, the dancers attired in the different national costumes. Open-air concerts will be given forenoons, afternoons and evenings throughout the fair.

It's false economy to begin saving at the cost of health.

When it comes to a vacation, the best is none too good—

Go where you can get the most diversion and best rest,

CHAPTER SEVEN (Continued.)

"There is some doubt on that point," answered Crochard slowly. "That little road is used but seldom, for a better one now leads around the base of the hill; and few people ever have occasion to enter the grove. It was, of course, for this very reason that the hut was chosen for this installation. I have found no one who saw any man at work there. On the other hand, a friend of mine, who has a cabaret on the main road just outside the city gate, has seen pass a number of times within the past week a man who, from his face and dress, was evidently not a Frenchman, and whose actions appeared to my friend to be suspicious."

Delcasse smiled.

"You seem to have many friends," he remarked, "and unusually observant ones."

"Yes," agreed Crochard; "I am fortunate in my friends; and they find it greatly to their interest to keep their eyes open."

"Did you secure a description of this stranger?"

"Yes, but there should have been much more than a mere description. Some of my friends are more intelligent than others. Still, it may be of service. This stranger was a small man, slightly built, with grey hair and bright, dark eyes. His complexion was also rather dark, and my friend hazarded the guess that he was a Spaniard. He was dressed in dark clothes, cut after a fashion not French, and wore a soft, dark hat."

"But that is a splendid description!" cried Delcasse. "What more did you want?"

"Ah, sir," replied Crochard, "if it had been some of my friends, they would have managed to meet this man, they would have engaged him in conversation, have discovered his business and place of abode, instead of which, this friend in question merely sits at the door of his cabaret and watches the man pass! He was not doing his duty—but he will not make such a mistake again!"

"His duty?" echoed Delcasse. "His duty to whom?"

"His duty to me," replied Crochard.

"But I do not understand," said the minister, more and more amazed. "Why should your friends have any such duty to you?"

Crochard hesitated. Lepine's face was fairly saturnine.

"I cannot explain that to you now, sir," said Crochard, finally. "I can only say that it is part of a system which has existed for a very long time, and of which I now happen to be the head."

Delcasse pondered this for a moment, his eyes on Crochard's face. Then he turned to Lepine.

"You must learn more of this stranger, Lepine," he said. "You, also, are at the head of a system—and a very expensive one."

"Yes, and a good one, sir," said Lepine, quickly. "One which is worth all it costs. But men will not work for money as they do for self interest; and, then, my system is a mere infant beside that of our friend here, which must be at last 200 years old."

"Oh, much more than that!" said Crochard, quickly, and smiled at Delcasse's astounded face. "Please understand," he added, "that I do not assert that this is the man we want. There is as yet no absolute proof, though I hope soon to have it. But there is one significant fact: when going from the city he frequently carried a heavy bundle, but never when returning."

"That is indeed significant," agreed Delcasse. "But it indicates another thing which astonishes me. If he did all this alone, it was because he had no one to assist him. But if he had no accomplice, who were the two men who watched the destruction of La Liberte? And, above all, who is this man who plans, alone and unaided, the destruction of our navy? What is his purpose? Whence did he come? Whither has he gone? Is he a madman—an anarchist?" Delcasse ran his fingers through his hair with a despairing gesture. "He astounds me!" he added. "My brain falters at thought of such a man!"

But Marbeau, to whom much of this talk had been incomprehensible, began at last to understand, and shook his head in violent protest.

"Whoever the man may have been," he broke out, "or whatever his business, it could have had nothing to do with the destruction of La Liberte."

Delcasse wheeled upon him.

"Why do you say that?" he demanded.

"Because, sir, it is absurd to suppose that the magazines of the ship could be exploded by wireless. Wireless has no such power. And, in this instance, it is quite easy to prove that they were not so exploded."

"Prove it, then," said the minister, impatiently.

"In the first place, the signal, which we now know came from that hut up yonder, were first noted on Saturday. They continued for half an hour, and yet no explosion occurred. In the second place, we caused them to be repeated today, and again there was no explosion."

"La Liberte was no longer there to explode," Delcasse objected grimly.

"True; but there were other ships near by—La Patrie, La Republique, La Verite. These ships and others were also there at the time of the explosion, yet they were not affected, although all of them had precisely the same sort of powder in their magazines that La Liberte had in hers."

"But you have already said that the waves could be intensified in a certain direction," Delcasse pointed out.

"So they can; but they cannot be confined to a channel nor directed at a mark, as a bullet it. The hut in the grove is fully three miles away from the harbor, and I assert that every ship in the harbor felt the waves with the same intensity as La Liberte."

"And what is your deduction from all this?" inquired Delcasse.

"My deduction is that those signals did not and could not cause the explosion."

"Then what was their purpose? How do you explain them?"

Marbeau made a gesture of helplessness.

"I do not know what their purpose was; I cannot explain them," he said; "but I am confident that they could not have destroyed La Liberte."

"I agree with General Marbeau," said Crochard suddenly.

They all stared at him, astonished that he should admit himself defeated.

"But I would add one word to his deduction," he added. "The word 'alone.'"

"'Alone'?" echoed Delcasse.

"I would make the statement thus: 'Those signals alone did not and could not cause the explosion.'"

Delcasse looked at him with puzzled eyes, and again ran his fingers impatiently through his hair.

"I do not understand," he said. "You are getting beyond me. What is your theory, then?"

The line in Crochard's brow deepened.

"It is a thing, sir," he answered slowly, "which I find difficult to express in words. There is, at the back of my mind, an idea, vague, misty, of which as yet I catch only the dim outlines. My process of reasoning is this: it is certain, as General Marbeau says, that the signals from the hut were, in themselves, harmless, or there would have been other explosions than that on board La Liberte. Wireless waves can be directed and concentrated only to a very limited extent. They can be made a little stronger in one general direction than in others, that is all. And, in this case, that general direction would have embraced all the ships at anchor in the harbor.

"There must, then, have been some other force which, at the appointed time, struck from this stream of signals a spark, so to speak, into the magazines of La Liberte, one after the other. That there was an appointed time we cannot doubt—we know that it was the moment of sunrise yesterday. That the magazines were fired one at a time, and a spaced intervals we also know. That they could not explode of themselves in that way seems certain.

"You will remember that the signals began more than an hour before sunrise, and continued for at least half an hour afterwards. We know that the signals were sent automatically. Why? Partly, no doubt, because it was necessary that they be absolutely regular; but also because the man who did this thing—who is himself, perhaps, the inventor of the method—chose to make no confidants, to have no accomplices, and he could not himself be in the hut to send the signals. Again you ask why. Not because the danger of discovery, since there was no such danger. I believe it was because it was necessary that he be somewhere else, directing from an angle, perhaps, that other force, so mysterious and so deadly. I seem to see two forces, traveling in converging lines, as two bullets might travel, their point of meeting the magazines of La Liberte. At the instant of their meeting, there is a shock, a spark — as though flint and steel met—and the magazine explodes—first the forward magazine, then the after magazine, then the main magazine—one, two, three! This is all mere guesswork, you understand, sir," Crochard added, in another tone, "but so I see it. And, after all, it is susceptible of proof."

"What proof?" demanded Delcasse.

"If my theory is the true one," Crochard explained, "there must have been, somewhere, another installation to create the intercepting force, which, of course, must also be transmitted by ether waves as wireless is, if it is to penetrate wood and steel. It must have been within an hour's walk — probably half an hour's walk—of the hut in the grove. For remember, the mechanism there was set going an hour before sunrise, and the man had then to reach his other mechanism, and have it ready to start at sunrise. It is for us to discover the place where this second mechanism was installed—and where it probably still remains."

"Yes, that would be proof," agreed Delcasse thoughtfully, "and for myself, I will say that I believe your theory the right one. But you have not yet explained the part played by the two watchers on the quay."

"Their part was that of watchers merely," said Crochard. "They were sent there to observe and to report to their masters—as they did."

"As they did?"

"Surely it is evident," Crochard explained, "that, if our theory is true, they would hasten to report. Imagine their master's anxiety until he heard from them! As a matter of fact, their report was filed within 15 minutes after the explosion. M. Lepine has it in his pocket."

Delcasse stared, uncomprehending; but Lepine, his face suddenly illumined, snatched out his pocketbook and produced the sheets of yellow tissue.

"Ah, yes, certainly!" he cried. "I was blind not to see it! The report was in form agreed upon: 'We continued our trip as planned. All well.' You will understand now, sir," he added, to Delcasse, "the reason for the high opinion I entertain of this gentleman!"

"But that message was sent to Brussels," objected the minister.

"It was sent 'restante.' A man was waiting at the postoffice to receive it and forward it instantly to Berlin."

Delcasse's face was a study, as he turned this over in his mind.

"What is your reading of the other message?" he asked, at last.

"My reading," answered Crochard, slowly, "is that, at the last moment, the emperor, appalled at the possible consequences, decided to forbid the atrocity, to which he had, perhaps, been persuaded against his better judgment, or in a moment of passion."

"And if the message had not been delayed, La Liberte would have been saved?"

"Precisely that, sir."

Delcasse's lips were twitching.

"You may be right," he said thickly; "you may be right; but it seems incredible. After all, it is merely guesswork!"

"You will pardon me, sir, but it is not guesswork," protested Crochard. "M. Lepine will tell you that, in a case of this kind, it must be all or nothing. Every detail, even to the slightest, the most significant, must fit perfectly, or they are all worthless. If I am wrong in this detail, I am wrong in all the others; if I am right in the others, I am also right in this. They stand or fall together. And I believe they will stand!"

The great minister was gazing fascinated at the speaker; for the first time, he caught a real glimpse of his tremendous personality.

"You mean, then," he said, finally, "that if any details we may discover hereafter fail to fit this theory, the theory must be discarded?"

"Discarded utterly and without hesitation," agreed Crochard. "More than that—"

A tap at the door interrupted him.

"Come in," said Delcasse.

His secretary entered, followed by a courier, carrying a portfolio.

"From Paris, sir," said the secretary, and the courier, with a bow, laid the portfolio on the minister's desk.

Delcasse took from his pocket a tiny key, unlocked the portfolio, drew out a package and glanced at the superscription.

"Ah," he said; "the photographs!" and ripped the package open.

There were some two dozen of them, together with a long typewritten report, which Delcasse glanced through rapidly.

"These are the result of the first report from Berlin," he said, "of officers who are absent from their commands and whose present whereabouts is not definitely known. A supplementary report will follow."

"We can begin with these," said Lepine, and looked them over.

Crochard had risen and was looking at the photographs over the detective's shoulder.

"We shall have to shave them first," he remarked.

"Shave them?"

"Divest them of those ornaments," and he indicated the upturned moustaches, a la kaiser, with which nearly all the pictured faces were adorned. "A brush and tablet of water color will do it."

M. Delcasse arose.

"I will leave that in your hands, gentlemen," he said. "I must meet the board of inquiry almost at once. General Marbeau, I thank you for your assistance. You will, of course, say nothing of all this to any one. As for you, sir," he added to Crochard, "I shall think you better another day. Till this evening, M. Lepine," and he bowed the three men out.

Half an hour later, Lepine and Crochard were closeted with Monsieur and Madame Brisson in the former's bureau at the du Nord. The little inn keeper and his wife were inarticulate with excitement, for they had guessed Lepine's identity from his resemblance to the pictures which every illustrated paper published at frequent intervals, and they suspected, from his bearing, that Crochard was a person of even greater importance. Their faces were glowing with pride, too, for their proffered refreshment had not been declined. In after days, when the sentence of silence had been lifted, they would tell the story to their admiring friends.

"Imagine it! Here we sat, I here, Gabrielle there; in that chair M. Lepine, prefect of the Paris service du surete, a little thin man with eyes oh, so bright; and in the fourth chair, with eyes still brighter and an air distinguished which there could be no mistaking—whom do you think? None other than the Duc de B——", or the Prince de R——, or the Marquis de C——; that was a detail to be filled in later, but a great highness, rest assured of that! And the way that both M. Lepine and the unknown highness relished their Chateau Yquem was a great compliment to the house.

After these amenities, Lepine produced the demoustached photographs.

"Look well at these," he said; "have care—do not speak unless you are very sure," and he passed the photographs one by one to Madame Gabrielle, who handed them on to her husband. Some 10 or 12 were examined without comment, and then Madame uttered a sudden exclamation.

"It is he!" she cried. "It is one of them!"

"One of whom?" asked Lepine.

"One of those men. Behold, Aristide!"

Brisson took the card and looked at it.

"Sacred heart! But you are right, Gabrielle!"

"You are sure?" persisted Lepine.

"Sure! But of a certainty! I would swear to him!"

Lepine put the photograph in his pocket, and turned to the others. But there was no second recognition. Brisson and his wife went through them twice, until they had convinced themselves that their other guest was not among them. Finally Lepine gathered the photographs together.

Peace With Justice.

From the New Haven Journal-Courier.

Nothing will satisfy this free republic but the definite assurance that democracy has been made safe. In the meantime those who permit themselves to be deceived by the rumors of restlessness and peace yearnings in Germany are weakening America's powers of resistance. It has become necessary to teach Germany a lesson she will heed. Peace with justice can alone be considered.

WHY THE UNITED STATES IS AT WAR

From the League to Enforce Peace.

Our country is at war. Many of us had hoped the war would not last long and that we need not be drawn into it. It was in harmony with our traditional policy that we should not involve ourselves in local quarrels among European nations. Both Jefferson and Washington had wisely warned us against entangling alliances. And for two very good reasons.

First, our forefathers felt, and rightly, that we in America were too remote to be concerned about the disputes which were always coming up among the nations of Europe. They thought that the things Europe quarreled and fought about were none of our business. And this was undoubtedly true a century ago.

Secondly, they felt, and rightly, that the success of our experiment in democracy, on this continent, should not be jeopardized by too intimate association with systems of government which we had repudiated and from which we had managed to free ourselves only after a costly war. It was thought that we ought not to be unequally yoked together with unbelievers in democracy. This also was undoubtedly true a century ago.

Time has annulled both of these reasons. We are no longer remote from Europe. There is no longer an old world and a new world. There is only one world and we are a vital part of that world. This war has awakened us from our dreams of isolation and seclusion. We have seen that war is a red plague which cannot be segregated. We have seen that oceans no longer separate nations. We have lived to see continent united by cables and commerce. By virtue of quick communication and rapid transportation, we have all become citizens of the world. We should not permit ourselves to forget that 1796 was a long time ago. At that time there were two democratic republics in the world, today there are more than a score. Democracy has demonstrated its worth. Our experiment has been imitated all over the world. Since our war of independence the Mayflower has voyaged back to Europe freighted with liberty and democracy.

If Jefferson and Washington could speak today they would welcome the league of liberal nations now allied against the autocratic central powers. We are fighting for the things America has always fought for. We are fighting for liberty and independence. The situation is perfectly plain. More than 13 nations are today threatened by tyranny far worse than that of George the Third.

What are the facts? Is it not a fact that Germany, stripped of honor and justice, without decency and shame, has run amuck among the nations? Is it not a fact that Germany has trampled upon every human right? Is it not a fact that Germany has flouted every law of reason and justice? Is it not a fact that Germany has torn into scraps of paper not only treaties, but the moral law itself? Is it not a fact that the policy of Prussia is to put the whole world in bondage to Berlin?

This is why we are at war—because democracy must be defended against the menace of the mailed fist. America must fight, as our president has said, to help make the world safe for democracy. America must fight for a peace that will last.

Loyalty of the Filipinos.

From the Minneapolis Tribune.

Prussian "kultur" has received its answer in the Philippines. At a public demonstration in Manila in which 25,000 took active part the Filipinos disclosed what they think of German ruthlessness and of the agents who have been seeking to foment sedition in the islands against the American flag. It is a conclusive commentary on this memorable affair that it was arranged and carried out to the last detail by Filipino initiative. Governor General Harrison and his American associates had no part in it save that the great throng of cheering, band playing, flag waving went to them to attest their loyalty to the great power which has safeguarded them for nearly 20 years.

Thinking Filipinos have made an intelligent interpretation of the war and its causes in relation to the present and future liberties. Senator Quezon sounded the keynote of sentiment for his people when he told them that the fight of the United States is their fight, that one of the issues is the right of little nations to exist as self governing entities, that another is the sanctity of international agreements and a third an insistence that the humanities of latter day civilization must be respected, including regard for the lives and honor of women and children.

Dutch Neutrality.

From the New Republic.

Holland has no trade with Germany that would compare in importance with the Swedish ore trade. But the leakage of food into Germany through Holland is probably greater than through any other neutral. This can be stopped if the matter is managed discreetly. Germany may bluster and threaten Holland with invasion if she does not resist allied coercion. Holland may threaten to join the Teutonic alliance. It is a safe guess, however, that Holland will remain neutral. Even if Holland wished to go over to the Teutonic alliance the Germans would probably dissuade her. The Germans do not wish the rich colonial domain of Holland to fall prey to the sea powers, as they hope to win this domain for themselves at a later time, when they annex Holland. Nor would the allies win any important advantage if Holland threw in her lot with them. To invade Germany through Holland would hardly be practicable. The probable outcome of a Dutch war against Germany would be the lodgment of the Germans on the North Sea coast in more favorable positions than any they now occupy.

Shevlin Claim the Record.

From the Louisville Courier-Journal.

To Mrs. Elizabeth Sherley Shevlin, formerly a Louisville girl, was paid the largest single life insurance claim settled in the United States and Canada in 1916, according to figures showing that the distributions by life insurance companies and associations reached a total of $758,500,000 during last year.

The sum of $1,525,000 in insurance was paid to the estate of Thomas L. Shevlin, husband of the Louisville woman. He died at his home in Minneapolis, December 29, 1915. Shevlin was lumber king of Minneapolis and in his earlier years was a Yale football star.

The Cost of Woolens.

From the Wool and Cotton Reporter.

There is more or less talk of an investigation by the government into the high prices of woolen cloth, not only to see whether prices paid for materials to be put into army and navy supplies are justifiable, but also in the interest of the general public. No doubt such action would appeal to buyers, and it might at the same time make possible an improvement in the present difficult situation. But too much ought not to be expected. No investigation is necessary to show that the abnormal cloth prices of today are in a great measure based on equally abnormal costs of manufacturing.

Why This Preparation?

Doc Bixby, in Nebraska State Journal.

What's the use? "Our Hope," published at Mendota, Ill., gives us every assurance that the world is in the midst of Armageddon. The fireworks are to follow immediately. The second coming is at hand. No delay on account of weather. Yet, the paper is in a campaign to raise an endowment fund of $200,000 for Aurora college. Why this preparation for temporal blessings in the face of a besom of destruction which cannot be avoided? Better put the money into an ice plant.

In School.

From the Louisville Courier-Journal.

"And how do you find school, Harold?"

"Rather difficult, sir. The teachers are inconsistent. In English composition we are told to be original. In arithmetic we are all expected to get the same answer."

HOW TO CONQUER THE CRAMP

Worst Effect Is Panic, Which Causes the Swimmer to Let All the Air Out of His Lungs.

A cramp is merely a contraction of the muscles caused by the presence of the cold. Obviously, it could not itself cause drowning. According to Popular Science Monthly, to cause a panic which threatens the swimmer off his guard, causes him to let the air out of his lungs, and allow the air passages to become filled with water. The safeguard against such a panic is absolute confidence in the floating power of the body. A demonstrable knowledge of the easy way to quickly fill the lungs to capacity with air.

The moment a cramp is felt the swimmer should turn on his back and begin to gulp the air, making every effort to keep himself from sinking. If he sinks he slowly exhales under water through the mouth, with the lips pursed as for whistling. If it is a leg cramp the knees will be drawn up against the abdomen, but the swimmer should force them out, pushing them with both hands and using his strength until they are fully extended. This will no doubt cause intense pain for a few seconds, but as soon as the legs are straightened out the cramp will vanish and the body, filled up by the air in the lungs, will float up to the surface. There still inhaling in great gulps and exhaling through puckered lips, the swimmer may remain until he regains his strength and can be picked up.

In case of cramp in the leg or foot the same system of breathing is followed and the affected part is stretched out by sheer strength.

Plumbers.

Whenever you invite the plumber in to spend the week and fix the kitchen faucet you should plan ahead, have everything in readiness.

Plumbers are often a little hurt to see that there have been no preparations. Plumbers take these things keenly.

If a pipe is leaking and you are going to have the plumbers come, move everything out of the kitchen so they will have room for their tools. In good weather and no mishaps you may get all of their tools around the first day.

Getting all the tools around is a good day's work for two plumbers and a boy. On the second day they examine the leak and make notes then are busy planning the week's work. If the leak is a plain hole then the thing is simple and they finish it in smart shape within the week.

It is best to send the children to the country when the plumbers come. Put a lid over the goldfish bowl. If you haven't a spare room or a stable you might arrange to have them board with the neighbors.—Illinois Register.

Restored Mrs. Vogt to Health Has It Suffered Since.

one of the worst cases of kidney complaint imaginable," says Mrs. Vogt, 6316 Audrey Ave., Wellston, "was laid up in bed for days was inflamed and the kidney secretions caused terrible pain. My back was in such bad shape when I moved the pains were like a knife-thrust. I got so dizzy I couldn't stoop and my head just throbbed with pain. Beads of perspiration would stand on my temples, then I would become cold and numb.

"My heart action was affected and I felt as if I couldn't take another I got so nervous and run down, life wasn't worth living and often that I might die so my suffering be ended. Medicine failed to help I was discouraged.

"I was persuaded to use Doan's Kidney Pills were recommended me and I could tell I was being after the first few doses. I kept better every day and continued cured me. My health improved in way and best of all, the cure has permanent. I feel that Doan's my life." Sworn to before me.

HIT BULL'S EYE THEN

Governor Cox of Ohio Explains Why His Marksmanship Improved Suddenly on Rifle Range.

James M. Cox, governor of Ohio, told a story when he visited Fort Benjamin Harrison, says the Indianapolis News:

"I was over at the fort this afternoon, and out at the rifle range Major Darrow now asked me if I wouldn't like to try shooting. The men then were shooting from the 600-yard range, said so Major Darrow borrowed a rifle for me from one of the men and another for himself, and we lay down behind the sand bags and began peppering away.

"After each shot that either of us made the man down in the pit waved a red flag that meant we had missed the target altogether.

"Finally after about a half dozen shots apiece, the major said: 'Young man, telephone down to that man in the pit that Major Darrow is shooting.' I did so the young man did, and then the major shot again, and the pit man showed the emblem that signified the shot had hit the bull's-eye.

"Then I said to myself, 'um hum.' And so I turned to the man on my right and I said, 'Young man, telephone down to the pit man that the governor of Ohio is shooting, and then next time I hit the bull's-eye, too.'"

Business.

In selecting men from among the recent officers at Ft. Harrison for the quartermaster's corps, preference was given those with some business experience, says the Indianapolis News. It was explained to the companies by the instructor officers. One young man put in a request for consideration for this department, and said that he had had seven years business experience. He appeared rather young for so many years business training, and the instructing officer proceeded to question him.

"How old are you?"

"Twenty-one."

"What sort of business experience have had?"

"I followed the plow and the corn every year since I was fourteen, hayed, mowed, fed the stock, hauled grain to the elevator, husked corn every fall, and believe that means business."

Almost Good.

"What kind of a screen artist is he?"

"He can draw anything but a check, and make anything but a living."—Puck.

The Future of The World.

From Life.

Ever since the war began we have been saying to ourselves, and having it said to us, that it was going to change the world and all its habits.

No doubt it will, a great deal, and what sort of details of change it will bring will depend upon who wins it.

For the future is always the child of the past. We know the past of Prussia and what the future is likely to be if Prussia shapes it. We also know our own past.

Our own past has defects. We are aware of that. The Prussian past has merits. We know that, too. But what we Americans are in this war for is to bring it about that this new life tha is coming to the world shall be the child of our past, rather than of Prussia's.

And why not? Can any people living look back on a century of endeavor and accomplishment, especially in self government, which is fitter to be the parents of the century to come than that which in these states lies back of us?

Not in all things but in many that are important, the United States offer a pattern to mankind. They are now, by force of circumstances, committed to the effort to secure for men the right to adopt that pattern if they like it.

That is why our sons have gone to training camps or face the draft, our daughters record their years and abilities at the summons of the governor, and our dollars run to meet the Liberty bonds, or fall for the Red Cross. It is all because we choose that our past and not Prussia's shall be the parent of the future, all because we have buckled to a formidable undertaking in the faith that once started, we are a formidable people, all because we have chosen as we should and intend to make good

ENGLISHMAN TELLS HOW HE ELUDED GERMAN GUARD

From the Kansas City Times

G P Whitaker an Englishman who was interned in Roubaix France, when the war broke out and the German armies swept across the frontier and was held there nearly two years and a half, has written a series of articles for Answers, the London weekly periodical describing his experiences in the following he tells of his escape into Belgium early in the present year)

For many months vague thoughts of escape had been in my mind I knew, as everyone not excluding the Germans knew that there was in existence a well organized "underground railway" available for men escaping from the menace of the Hun

How to get in touch with it was the problem The secret of its methods was so carefully guarded that it was almost impossible to get any accurate information Time and again I walked to the Franco Belgian frontier and there separated by a five-foot barrier of barbed wire talked the matter over with two French youths friends of mine, who were living in Belgium near the frontier We had established communication originally by means of smugglers

At last despairing of finding help, we decided to take a chance and I made my preparations They were simple enough I changed my money up to the amount of 500 marks the mark is at a premium of 10 per cent in places like Roubaix occupied by the Germans and placed two soft collars and two handkerchiefs in my pocket

Early one frosty January morning I set out. I had no illusions about the perilous nature of the adventure on which I was to embark I had heard that only a day or two before 37 men had been caught trying to escape over the Belgium-Dutch frontier and had each been sentenced to 20 years penal servitude

It was a comparatively simple matter to get over the frontier separating Belgium from France, though how it was done I shall not indicate Sufficient to say that I met my friends and with them remained in hiding for two or three days before we set forth on our wanderings.

A Dramatic Moment

Our first big difficulty was to get out of the military zone, controlled by General Von Denk into that which came under the government of General Von Bissing. These zones were strictly separated by sentries and patrols, and but for the intervention of that luck which stood nobly by us during the whole of our travels we might have found our exploit abruptly terminated almost at its commencement Our luck in this case took the form of a wool smuggler With him we came to an arrangement, and that night he and his gang allowed us to accompany them Over plowed fields and derelict woodland paths we moved cautiously, until we came to a point near the border of the two areas. A little distance away paced the German sentry.

"Hush!" said our leader. "Remain here!"

He moved cautiously forward to reconnoiter Someone of our party moved, and there was a crackling of twigs. Instantly the sentry was aroused.

"Halt!" he challenged.

Instantly the smugglers dropped their packages, and we followed them in headlong flight. That night we spent in a cafe, snatching what sleep we could on chairs. The following night we tried again, and got successfully over the line. Amazing as it may sound, for the rest of the time we were traveling in Belgium we were allowed to move about practically unmolested I am naturally diffident in giving places and dates, for, although we received plenty of aid in one way and another, I am anxious not to provide too much enlightenment as to the way fugitives fare on their way through Belgium.

There was little subterfuge about our escape. We lived and moved about openly, and no one questioned us. During one part of our journey to Brussels we hired a carriage and pair, and drove for many miles along the high road. We passed dozens of Germans Many of them saluted us; others joked cheerfully and passed the time of day. No one thought of us for a moment as fugitives.

Sometimes we got lifts in farmers' carts, and it was in one of these that at last we reached the outskirts of Brussels one evening about 6 o'clock. We boarded an electric car, paid our fares and passed brazenly into the town. We had had an address furnished us by a man we had met on the road, as a place where we could live in a retired fashion until we had perfected our plans for the most perilous portion of our journey—the escape into Holland. Judge of our consternation when we learned, almost at the last moment, that it was now the headquarters of no less a person than General Von Bissing himself.

However, we found a safer haven, and for four days we stayed in the town.

I know there is a widespread impression that Belgium is a crushed and starving country. I can only speak from my own experience of the places where I sojourned during my eight weeks in the country. I saw no starvation. On the contrary, Belgium was in far better case than the occupied provinces of France. Indeed, save for the prevalance of the German uniforms, it would have been difficult to believe that it was a conquered country.

Into Brussels By Cart.

In Brussels life to an observer was much the same as in normal times. Food was plentiful and fairly cheap. I give as an example my Sunday dinner there. I had good soup a generous helping from leg of mutton, potatoes haricot beans white bread cheese jam and a choice of wine or beer

All the shops were open and doing a brisk trade. You could buy almost anything you needed at a moderate price. Indeed, it was common knowledge that the German soldiers bought food to send home to their families. I spent many days in Belgium, and never lacked for good food, although the districts nearest the French frontier were suffering from a scarcity of many commodities

Back in Roubaix there was a dearth of many necessaries, which, to me, made the contract with the plenty of Belgium seem more acute. I bought Egyptian cigarets of a British brand in Brussels at trivial cost, in Roubaix I have seen smokers carefully drying rhubarb leaves, to be used as a tobacco substitute Confectionery was displayed in quantities, and, in fact, the retail shops showed an abundance of every kind of eatable.

On my way to Brussels I saw what struck me at first as a strange phenomenon There were a cattle grazing in the fields, a sight I had not seen in northern France for many months. Every head of cattle there had been swept away

Let me again insist that in telling of these things I am only speaking of my own experience

The everyday life of Brussels was going on when we reached there Save for very slight differences one of these was the complete absence of motors from the streets to a casual observer existence was carried on with every suggestion of normality Amusement seekers were lavishly catered for Theatrical posters were everywhere, and cafe and movie theaters did a roaring business

For the first time since war began I went to a play It was at the Theater Moliere and the play was La Course des Flambeaux' by Paul Hervieu, acted by a Belgian company. Scarcely an unoccupied seat remained in the building and again and again the whole audience rocked with applause. Once my attention was directed to a couple of German soldiers in the stalls.

They said a friend who had accompanied me "sit there every night to see that nothing derogatory to Germany or its armies is allowed to creep into the play Similar guards are stationed at every theater"

"Veronique" and "The Merry Widow" were being played at other theaters. All these entertainments began at about 6 30 o'clock, for the theaters had to be closed by 9 One afternoon I went to a cinema Like the theater, it was crowded although it only gave the ordinary dramatic and comic films. No war pictures were shown. One theater has been entirely taken over by the Germans, and operas and plays in German are given

In northern France civilians are not allowed to use the railways. I found few restrictions of that sort in Belgium. Apart from the difficulty of passing between the two zones into which Belgium is divided without special passports, anyone is allowed to travel freely on showing their identification cards.

The Belgian posts so far as the interior of the country at any event is concerned, are still in being [illegible] stamps must be used, heavily superimposed with the words "Belgian post," and eight centimes (about four-fifth of a penny) is charged for the transmission of a postcard Fifteen centimes (about three halfpence) is charged for a letter Belgian postmen both collect and deliver Buttermilk.

The great buttermilk controversy between a tribune of the people and an official of one of the large dairy companies continues to curdle the contemporary press. The issues of this dispute are slightly coagulated. On the one hand, it is contended that the companies wantonly spill a valuable by-product of the churn in snowy cascades down Westchester hillsides though the parched throats of thousands of city dwellers yearn for it, on the other hand the contention is that buttermilk doesn't pay for its own shipment. The world is divided into two camps those that can and those that cannot bear the taste of buttermilk; those to whom the sign in a store window, "Ice cold buttermilk," acts as a lure, more than was the cooled sherbet of the Apennines to Roman patricians, or the flavored ices, fetched by breathless runners from the Andean snows, to Incas of Peru; and those to whom the mere taste of buttermilk, sour and queer and miscellaneous, is anathema. Nevertheless, the buttermilk worshipers and the buttermilk haters should, in these parlous times, momentarily forget their feud and reach an agreement—at least a modus bibendi.

Going After Viereck.

The Vigilantes are getting after George Sylvester Viereck. In an article entitled "Suppress the Kaiser's Cousin," Hermann Hagedorn, whose name also has a German sound, by the way, recalls a brag of Viereck's, that "by grace of human frailty" George Sylvester was a first cousin of the kaiser. Hagedorn quotes enough of "Viereck's American Weekly" to show that this most un-American sheet should be made an end of.

Hagedorn points out that "Germany is at the moment carrying on two vigorous diplomatic campaigns. She is, on the one hand, trying to disrupt the allies; and, on the other, she is trying to prevent the United States from entering whole heartedly into her preparations for war, by stirring up social unrest and persuading the American people that they are the dupes of the Morgan interests and of "malignant England."

"Viereck's Weekly," the article shows, is "doing its bit" for the kaiser in both these campaigns and "should be suppressed out of hand." Concerning Mr. Viereck, the writer remarks: "He should be treated like a man in a besieged city, caught poisoning the drinking water."

Took Him Literally.

A clergyman in a remote part of the Scottish Highlands was speaking at length to his congregation of the many things round us that are shrouded in mystery and of which we know little As he warmed to this theme, he became eloquent, and frequently repeated the oft quoted saying of Goethe "More light! Oh, for light!"

His surprise may be imagined, says the Scottish American, when, after one of these utterances, the old beadle, who had been dozing since the commencement of the sermon, woke with a start, then got up, tiptoed softly into the vestry, seized two additional candles and, ascending the pulpit stairs, placed them beside the two already there, and in a loud whisper, heard all over the church, exclaimed:

"Ye maun do wi' these, for there's nae mair!"—Youth's Companion

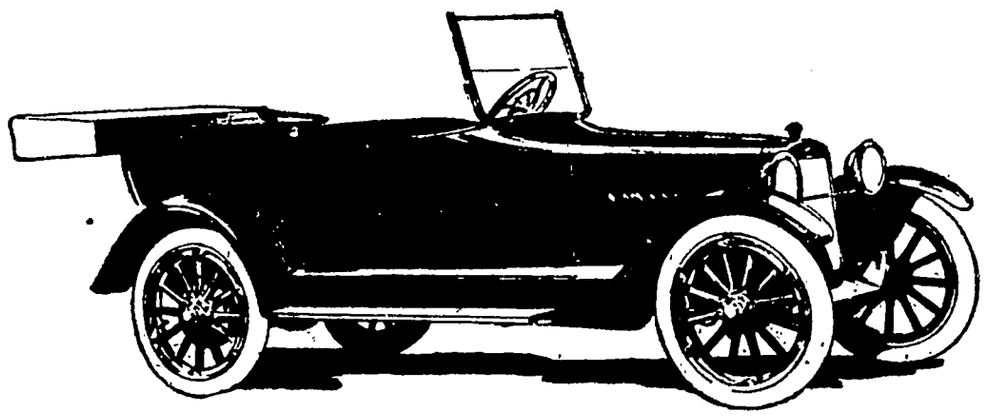
SAXON "SIX"

A BIG TOURING CAR FOR FIVE PEOPLE



25.9 Miles Per Gal. of Gas

234 stock model Saxon "Sixes" travel 70,200 miles July 18 and set grand average of 25.9 miles per gal. of gas

To give a national demonstration of the remarkable gasoline economy of Saxon "Six", 234 Saxon dealers joined in a 300 mile drive July 18.

A grand average of 25.9 miles per gallon of gasoline was registered for the 70,200 miles of travel.

Consider that this run took place in 234 different parts of the country, under 234 different sets of conditions, over 234 different kinds of roads.

Consider that these 234 cars were stock model Saxon "Sixes", not "tuned up" special cars, not cars with "doped" gasoline.

That proves that this 25.9 miles per gallon of gasoline is the ordinary, the average performance of 234 Saxon "Sixes" taken right out of stock.

And it proves as nothing else would prove, the gasoline economy your Saxon "Six" will give you. No other car in its class can match this record.

Furthermore, these 234 Saxon "Sixes" averaged 175 miles per quart of oil.

And not a single instance of mechanical trouble occurred throughout the entire 70,200 miles.

There is the proof that Saxon "Six" is your kind of a car. Price f. o. b. Detroit, $935.

She Knew What to Take.

Five-year-old Mary, who is always anxious to be in everything that goes on, lives in a small town where the long-suffering minister still endures donation parties, to make up his back salary. Just before the last one she begged eagerly:

"Can't I take something, too, muvver?"

"No; your father and I take something; that will be plenty."

But the child could not bear to give up the idea, so she ransacked the whole house for something suitable. Finally she appeared before her mother with a worn and faded dress of her own.

"Please, muvver, can't I take this? See, it's not a speck of good for anything," she urged.—Christian Herald.

A financial note says that money is easier. Perhaps it goes that way, but it comes about as usual.

Explosion Averted.

"I hear you have been a very sick man," said the manager of the garage.

"Yas sur," replied Mr. Erastus Pinkley. "'Dey mos' despaired of my recovery. But I never had no doubt about it myself. I jes' had to get well."

"Why?"

"Well, suh, I knowed I wasn't good enough to go to heaven. An' workin' in dis garage has got me soaked so chock-full o' gasoline dar wasn't a chance of deir wantin' me aroun' de other place."

His Experience.

She—In a battle of tongues a woman can hold her own.

He—Yes, perhaps she can; but she never does.

At the club Thompson and Taylor were discussing the peculiarities of certain of the card players when Thompson said:

Picnic in a Tree.

In a public park of Tacoma, Wash., the stump of a huge cedar tree has been hollowed out to form a shelter for picnickers; the top of the stump is capped by a platform which is now used as a bandstand.

Shameful Secret.

The 1917 Dairy Cattle Congress

Every Klemme Farmer Interested in Dairying Should Attend

Never in the history of the world has the dairy cow been called upon to perform such an enormous task as she is today. From every reliable source comes the warning that the supply of milk and its products must not only be maintained, but greatly increased to meet the national demands This fact, coupled with more than a 1200 percent increase in the exports of condensed milk and a doubling and tripling of other dairy products, places a vital duty upon the shoulders of American dairymen.

The 1917 Dairy Cattle Congress, which will be held at Waterloo, October 1st to 7th inclusive, will undoubtedly surpass all previous shows, because its purpose is in direct line with the extensive food conservation campaign now being conducted by the government Arrangements are under way to give a practical demonstration of every important phase of dairying and emphasize the magnitude of the industry.

Present indications point to the fact that the high standing established for both numbers and qualityof cattle shown will be maintained if not materially increased this year. Breeders representing fifteen states have already advised their intention of showing their herds and a much larger territory will undoubtedly be represented by the time entries close. The premiums offered to the fine herds, namely. Guernseys, Holsteins, Ayrshires, Jerseys and Brown Swiss total more than eight thousand dollars. The national breed associations and clubs will offer substantial premiums in addition to those given by the show proper.

The manner in which exhibitors of machinery, dairy equipment and supplies have reserved space indicates a great confidence in future dairying. The 48,000 square feet of exhibit space in the buildings and the ten acres of exhibit space on the grounds will be filled to capacity. The man who contemplates the construction of a new barn, the purchase of a cream separator, milking machine, lighting plant, water system, or any piece of up-to-date farm equipment, should visit this show. Here the buyer has a chance to see and have demonstrated to him many different makes and can choose the one that suits his fancy.

The Iowa State Dairy Association will again hold its interesting sessions on the grounds. A well balanced program for both the production and manufacturing sides of the industry will be given. With the many grave problems facing the dairymen and creamerymen this year, there should be a record breaking attendance at every session. Every day's program will also contain scheduled meetings of national and state organizations for the development of dairying.

Special emphasis will be placed on the dairy product exhibits consisting of butter cheese and market milk. Liberal premiums will be found in all classes for these products and novel exhibits showing their food value will be made. The first market milk contest, in which the actual milk which distributers were daily selling, was entered, proved so popular and instructive to consumers that it will be again repeated. Working milk plants, creameries and cheese factories will also be in operation. Every effort will be made in all of these demonstrations to show the consuming public the real value of milk products.

A large national pure food show will again be held in connection with the dairy show. Canning demonstrations and canned exhibits will be special features of this department.

As an added attraction, a fancy light harness and saddle horse show will be held in connection with the cattle show. Contracts have been signed with a number of the best horse breeders in the country and they will bring their entire showing of horses and rigs. Exhibitions will be given both afternoon and evening during the week. Musical programs and feature attractions will be given as in the past.

Hog Profit Feeding on $2 Corn

A. W. Wallace Gets Dollar a Day Profit From 34 Pigs

A. H. Wallace, DeWitt, Iowa, is one of the first farmers to have the pigs and complete records to show that it is entirely profitable practice to feed pigs, via the self-feeder plan, on $2 corn. His feeding records are reported to Iowa State College by L. O. Wise, county agent, Clinton county.

On June 22, Wallace put 34 pigs weighing 47 pounds apiece, on a self-feeder containing corn and tankage. August 1, or 40 days later, these pigs were weighed and had exactly doubled in weight, having gained 47 pounds—with an average daily gain of 1.17 pounds.

Figuring corn at $2 a bushel, tankage at $80 per ton, pasture at $10, pork gains at 15c per pound, these pigs made a net profit above cost of feed of $40 in 40 days. The pigs put on 17.5 pounds of pork for each bushel of corn consumed. Each 100 pounds of pork put on cost $11.20.

Accurate records are being kept of all feed consumed. The pigs will be weighed again next month and gain and profit determined to that time.

BAND CONCERTS

Last week on Thursday evening the Klemme Concert Band gave the first street concert of the season. The band has just been re-organized and they will give concerts on the street every Thursday evening until late this fall. There was not a very large crowd in town due to the fact that it was little known that a concert would be given, but watch the crowds come in hereafter. Klemme has a good band, as good a band as any town in this part of the state, but they will be better every week, as the boys are working hard on new music so that they may give a pleasing variety of music for the concerts. Boost for the band, attend the concerts every Thursday night, don't forget the time or place.

KLEMME CREAMERY MAKES GOOD SHOWING

The Klemme Creamery reports the largest business for June since the creamery was organized in 1913, they having paid out for cream $12,074.-89; they having taken in and churned 114,149 lbs. cream, butter made from same was 34,643 lbs.

This is somewhat of a record to feel proud of. This large amount paid out to the surrounding farmers for cream should be a great benefit to the merchants and business men of Klemme.

—By Gimer

We will say that it is some report. Klemme farmers can feel proud of this as they are the factor that brought about such a record, it shows that Klemme farmers are good dairymen as well as farmers. Also A. D. Gimer, the buttermaker of the creamery is to be praised for the effort put forth towards this record.

Flies are More Dangerous Than You Think

Flies breed so fast it is difficult to stamp them out. But, at least, we can keep them out of our houses.

And we ought to keep them out — not only for our comfort, but for our health. Many people don't realize what great disease-carriers flies are. They often come laden with disease germs directly to our food.

Screen the house and porches well and you prevent disease. Also you add to your comfort and peace of mind.

It does not cost much to screen a house. Let us screen your house.

THE KLEMME TIMES

Ray A. Jorgenson, Pub.

KLEMME, IOWA

In certain districts of Holland news of a domestic sort is frequently announced by the windmills. When, for instance, a miller gets married, he stops his mill with the arms of the wheel in oblique position and with the sails unfurled. His friends and guests do likewise with their mills, in celebration of the ceremony. To announce a birth the wheel is stopped with the arms in a slanting position, but at a more acute angle than for a marriage, and with the two upper sails unfurled. In the event of a miller's death, his family cause the sails of the mill to be all furled, and the wheel is turned round until the arms assume an upright cross, in which position they are left until after the funeral has taken place.

F J Haskin tells what has become of some of the breweries in states that have gone "dry" They are used for canning clams, making vinegar, handling dairy products, cold storage warehouses, making artificial ice, meat packing, making yeast, dry cells, soap, chemicals, moving picture films, paints, varnish and everything from ice to loganberry juice. One has become a hospital and another a church. The Coors brewery at Golden, Colo., was famous for its size and its beer, but nothing could save it against the "dry" wave. So one of the Coors brothers took over the plant and is now doing a thriving business in malted milk

CHEROKEE SOLDIERS AID FARMER FRIEND

Help Harvest Oats Crop of Man Who Proved Himself a Good Neighbor.

Cherokee Ia, Aug. 11—Members of Company M believe that one good turn deserves another. And with this idea in mind 50 or 60 of them volunteered to help J. C. Moats in the harvest field. As a result of the combined efforts of the boys the shocking was done in record time.

Eighty acres were harvested, the shocking being done at the rate of an acre a minute.

Mr. Moats' farm is quite near Camp Hyatt and he has been very good to the men of the company, providing wood for camp, loaning them a team when needed and also seeing that chicken was provided as an occasional item on the camp menu. It was in appreciation of these various favors that the men volunteered to aid him in his harvest.

SEEK TO COLLECT ON IDA COUNTY ESTATE

State, County and Legatees in Legal Squabble Over $750,000 Left by Alex McHugh.

Ida Grove, Ia., Aug. 10—C. A Robbins, assistant in the attorney general's office, was in Ida Grove the first of the week, and laid the foundation, with the assistance of Murphy Bros., Raymond and J. A., county attorney and assistant county attorney, for the starting of legal action to collect the collateral inheritance tax in the estate of Margaret McHugh, deceased County Attorney Raymond Murphy, started an action over a year ago to collect this tax, but through attorneys for the legatee, D. H. Hedrick, the matter has been held up, and no court action has ever been taken.

Mrs. McHugh, widow of Alex McHugh, one of the pioneer citizens of Ida county, who, at his death left an estate of over $750,000, consisting of lands in Ida county and South Dakota, notes and mortgages, was given the entire estate.

Several suits were started at the death of the widow, when it developed that Mrs. McHugh had left practically everything to her business adviser, D. H Hedrick, of Battle Creek, and with whom she made her home after her husband's death

A settlement was reached with one of the contesting heirs, and in another case, wherein the contestant claimed to be a grandson, the court held that insufficient showing had been made as to relationship, and his action was thrown out of court An appeal was taken to the supreme court and the lower court upheld.

Messrs. Murphy and Robbins believe that the estate, or the beneficiary thereof should pay over to the county and state a just tax on personal property, money and credits, and it is likely that a personal appeal will be taken from the appraisement recently made by the collateral inheritance board and which amounts to several thousand dollars, and also that independent action will be begun to set aside the assignments made to D. H Hedrick, and a further action to recover for the county an amount of taxes based on the real valuation of the estate

FLOATING SALOON USED TO BEAT "BONE DRY" LAW

McGregor, Ia., Aug. 10.—Floating saloons are the latest. They have superseded "island saloons" in King Rum on the Run A mile north of here there is now an oasis for thirsty Iowans that has done a lot of traveling in order to keep within reach, but at last has found a most satisfactory location—the middle of the Mississippi. To the innocent observer, it is a picturesque houseboat as it rests on the placid surface of the river. However, there is considerable activity around and within it and many boats come and go and visitors are very frequent Every 24 hours, it is "heave ho" with the anchor and the oasis is moved up or down the river two or three feet in compliance with the laws of navigation, as interpreted by the proprietor

500,000 IOWA WOMEN WILL ASSIST HOOVER

Housewives to Sign Pledges to Aid in Conservation of Food.

Webster city, Ia., Aug. 9.—A food conservation army of 500,000 Iowa women to cooperate with Herbert Hoover and the government during the war, is the aim of Mrs. Frances Whitley, of Webster City, chairman of the Iowa women's defense council, and J. S. Deems, of Burlington, representative on Hoover's national food conservation board.

Every woman in Iowa will be given an opportunity to sign a pledge to do everything in her power to aid in food conservation in this state—800,000 pledges will be circulated among Iowa women in a few days. The card pledges the signers to accept membership in the United States food administration, to practice food conservation and to carry out the directions and advice of the food administrator insofar as circumstances will permit. The plan is to have as members all women who actually handle food in the homes. The pledges are in post card form and are to be mailed to the food administrator in Washington. Instructions will then be mailed to the woman signing the pledge, and a household membership tag will also be sent to hang in a window of the home.

The food administrator plans to keep in close touch with the women of the whole country through this organization Mrs. Whitley is anxious to have as large an Iowa membership as possible and the entire resources of the women's state defense council will be used to circulate the cards.

OATS YIELD AT IDA GROVE 104 BUSHELS PER ACRE

Ida Grove, Ia., Aug. 9.—The first threshing of small grain for the year 1917 in the vicinity of Ida Grove took place Saturday of last week and demonstrated that it has certainly been an ideal season for that farm product. Sam Nailor, who resides in town, but farms on a small scale at the outskirts of the city, had a 9½-acre patch of oats and by machine measurement he obtained 988 bushels, or 104 bushels per acre, and they were the best oats that have been threshed in Ida county for many a year, according to Grant Nelson, owner of the machine that did the work, and he has been operating a threshing machine for 25 years in this county The prospect of a big crop has brightened considerable during the past week, a soaking rain visiting nearly every part of the county Friday night, and another rain is in progress at this time.

NO INTIMATION WHEN ARMY WILL GO SOUTH

Des Moines, Ia., Aug. 9.—Although August 10 the date tentatively set for the transportation of the Iowa National guard to the cantonment at Deming, N M is but three days off, no definite plans have been announced for the big troop movement and it is practically certain that the men will be in the state at least two weeks more.

Advices from Deming are that the camp is not yet ready to receive any considerable number of troops although a large force is busy. Two Iowa officers are now at Deming, Maj. Ray Losan and Capt Melville Gillette, of the quartermaster's department, aiding in the work of preparation.

SIMMONS OPENS WAR TAX DEBATE

Defends Senate's Bill Against House Measure With Statement Prepared by J. P. Morgan & Co.

Washington, Aug. 11.—In opening Senate debate on the $2,996,950,000 war tax bill today Senator Simmons, chairman of the finance committee, declared the committee's purpose in revising the House bill was to raise sufficient federal revenues for extra war expenses without injustice to rich or poor, and without injuring sources from which the new and future taxes must come.

"The bill," said Senator Simmons, "proposes to raise a larger proportion of war revenues by direct taxation and less by bonds, distributing the war burden between the present and future generations." He pointed out that nearly $1,400,000,000 of the new war taxes are to be obtained from incomes and war profits alone, with over $200,000,000 more from intoxicants.

Attacks House Bill.

Senator Simmons submitted statistics said to have been compiled by J. P. Morgan & Co. showing that 45 great corporations done will pay under the proposed committee revision, war profits taxes of $239,977,000 against only $77,736,600 proposed under the House bill.

Senator Simmons declared that the committee proposes a specified war profits and not an excess profits tax. The House standard is "wholly unsatisfactory, artificial and arbitrary."

Mr. Simmons' statement regarding the publishers' tax was:

"Your committee decided to eliminate the House zone system because it was made clear to them that it is a tax which would be not only burdensome, but in a number of cases disastrous to many publications. Representatives of practically all the great publications of the country, appeared before the committee against this tax. The tax submitted by your committee is not a logical one, it must be confessed, but it was the best your committee was able to devise in view of the present conditions of the publishing business."

M'ADOO ASKS U. S. INSURE SOLDIERS

Authority to Provide for Dependents Given in Bills Introduced in House and Senate Today.

Washington, Aug. 11.—Authority to make effective the government's program of insuring the armed forces of the nation was sought of congress today in bills introduced in both houses by Senator Simmons and Representative Alexander. The proposed legislation would provide insurance at minimum cost, for American soldiers, sailors and marines, the insured men paying the premiums; family allowances to dependents of men in the nation's military or naval service; indemnification for disabilities and the reeducation and rehabilitation at government expense of injured men.

Half Pay To Wives.

A feature not previously announced, would make it compulsory for officers and men to allot a minimum of $15 a month out of their pay to dependent wives and children. These allotments would be supplemented by family allowances to be made by the government of from $5 to $50 a month, according to the circumstances and number of dependents.

Liberal indemnities for partial and total disability are included in the program, varying from $40 to $75 per month minimum up to $200 a month for higher officers. Insurance would be written by the government on the lives of the men at a rate of approximately $8 per $1,000 in sums from $1,000 to $10,000, the premiums payable in installments.

Cost Not Excessive.

The cost to the government, as estimated by Secretary McAdoo, would approximate the following:

	First Year.	Second Year.
Family allowances	$141,000,000	$190,000,000
Death indemnities	3,700,000	22,000,000
Compensation for total disability	5,250,000	35,000,000
Compensation for partial disability	3,200,000	21,000,000
Insurance against death and disability	23,000,000	112,500,000
Totals	$176,150,000	$380,500,000

The total for the two years is thus placed at $556,650,000, which Mr. McAdoo estimates at less than 6 per cent of the cost to the country of conducting the war.

In its general features the bill was approved by the advisory committee of insurance representatives summoned by Secretary McAdoo to Washington on July 2.

Children Get Allowances.

"They opposed, however," Mr. McAdoo advised the president, "the grant of any government insurance over and above the compensation. They favored, over and above compensation, the payment by the government of $1,000 in each case of death during service, or within five years after discharge of service, in lieu of insurance."

Children up to 18 years of age and wives of men and officers would be given family allowances. Other dependent relatives would be given allowances only in case voluntary allotments were made them out of the pay of the man insured.

The bill does not attempt to cover the methods to be pursued in reeducating and rehabilitating injured men. Two principles, however, are recognized.

The man's obligation to avail himself of such opportunities as the government may provide under penalty of loss of compensation during "any period of unreasonable refusal," and a man's right to disability compensation regardless of his individual economic recuperation.

To Support Families.

When disability results in death, dependents would receive from $15 to $60 a month, the sum again being rated according to the circumstances of the dependents.

All insurance of this character, the bill provides, would be "nonassignable and free from the claims either of the insured or of the beneficiary."

It would be limited to wife, children or specified kindred.

On the administrative side the bill provides for a division of the government's war risk insurance bureau into two sections, one on marine and seamen's insurance, the other on military and naval insurance.

The alliance, according to the secretary, Robert Maisel, will work in cooperation with the American Federation of Labor.

RAILROAD TROOPS LEARN TO AVOID GAS

It's a Case of "the Quick or the Dead," They Are Told.

London, Aug. 10.—Through the courtesy of the war and foreign offices, a staff correspondent of the Associated Press has been permitted to visit the American troops at their billets in England. They were found encamped in a valley in which white tents extended as far as the eye could see, with British officers and a squad of non-commissioned officers training them.

These British instructors were busy making soldiers from men who until a few weeks ago never saw an automatic pistol or a gas mask.

The Americans are working with gas masks. "It is a question of the quick or the dead," the instructor told the Americans, and after that no time was lost.

Adjusting the Masks.

The Americans are being instructed in the use of several varieties of masks, some of them resembling a hangman's cap and others adjusting like the apparatus of a wireless telegraph receiver over the heads. Once speedy in the adjustment of the mask, the Americans are taken to the gas trenches, where they walk through deadly fumes and to the open plain where just a little of various gases are liberated from tanks. This is done so that the soldiers will learn to recognize the smell and recognizing it take no more than one whiff.

The British officers at the camp are highly pleased with the appearance and adaptability of the Americans and with the scheme of enrolling the railroad men in separate units.

The Americans sometimes meet with trouble in conversing with the Britishers. As yet the Americans do not understand the "Cockney" speech well and the "Cockneys" themselves have some little trouble in understanding the idioms of the men from Chicago and New York. American and British flags float over the camp from the same pole and, to quote the adjutant of one of the battalions, "they mix well—both red, white and blue—the best in the world and the next best."

CROWDER GIVES DRAFT ORDERS

Men Called Out Will Be Kept Under Civilian Officers Until They Reach Military Camps.

Washington, D. C., Aug. 10.—Regulations under which men of the new national army will be called to the colors beginning September 1, has been issued by Provost Marshal General Crowder. They map out in detail the whole program to be followed until every soldier of the selective draft army has been accepted by the adjutant general of the training cantonment to which he is assigned.

Two hundred thousand of the first 687,000 men will be called up to September 1, and forwarded to their camps before September 5. The whole business of assembling the levies at en training points, providing them with shelter food and transportation and giving them their actual induction into military life is entrusted to the civilian local boards which selected them for service. Until the men reach the camps they will not be in contact with uniformed officers. The civilian control is carried forward through every stage of the draft to the very gates of the military camps, where the making of soldiers will begin, to be completed within sound of the guns in France.

Exemption Is Abused.

Wholesale claims for exemption from the army draft, reported from many sections, caused Provost Marshal General Crowder to telegraph to governors of the states directing that local boards "reduce discharges for dependency to a far more restricted class and to very necessitous and clearly defined circumstances."

In some districts as high as 80 per cent of the registrants called for examination are filing claims for discharge on the ground of dependent relatives. Such a condition indicates, General Crowder said, that unfair advantage is being taken of the regulations designed to protect men who properly should be exempted from the military service and actually threatens to interfere seriously with the raising of the national army.

CLAIM TO EXEMPTION MUST BE IN WRITING

Des Moines, Ia., Aug. 10.—The southern district supreme exemption board, in session here today, refused personal hearings to 16 men accompanied by attorneys ready to argue their claims to exemption. Chairman Ely stated that all claims must be made by affidavit. Claims will be examined through the agency of the county attorney.

The town of Grimes, which lies within the civilian sanitary zone of Camp Dodge, is being surveyed by a party from the United States public health service today. Every house must abide by government rules of sanitation.

IOWAN IS FREED.

Davenport, Ia., Aug. 10.—Henry Porter, longing to travel, was set free today after a preliminary hearing. He was arrested because of his failure to register. He was arrested at Smithland yesterday with $12,000 in cash in his pockets. He gave a $1,000 bond. Porter gave his home as Churchill, Tenn. He claims to have traveled through every state in the union since war was declared on Germany. He states that he "forgot to register."

ASK COMPLETE RECORD IN CAPT. SHANNON CASE

Judge J. W. Anderson heard arguments in the district court this afternoon in the Shannon-Ward controversy.

C. N. Jepson, attorney for Shannon, attacked the answer filed by the city attorney. He declared that the city officials were evading the writ and had completely ignored the court's order.

He asked that the city be compelled to certify a complete record of the transactions in the Shannon case.

ENTENTE SHIPS BOMBARD TURKS IN ASIA MINOR

Canadians Tighten Grip on Lens by Penetrating Farther Into German Positions—Fall Due Soon?

GUNS BUSY IN FLANDERS

Preparations for Great Drive Under Way Again as Both French and English Infantry Advance.

While the entente guns are still hammering the German lines in Flanders with a fury apparently equal to that of the original bombardment, the infantry has not been entirely inactive. Today important gains by both the British and the French on a seven mile front, taking in Westhoek and Bixschoote, are reported.

British and French Gain.

British troops last night finished the task of driving the Germans from the town of Westhoek and likewise cleared them from the lines on the ridge near the town.

The French, near Bixshoote, advanced east and north of that place adding to their recent gains.

Silence from the British side regarding the artillery battle continues. The German reports are the principal reliance for news of the bombardment and these continue to emphasize its importance.

Busy Before Lens.

Along stretches of the Arras battle front there are evidences of pronounced activity by the entente forces. Reports come of notable work of the Canadians before Lens.

It has seemed several times that the fall of Lens was imminent but evidently the hour has not been considered ripe to deliver the final stroke.

SHELL TURKS IN ASIA.

London, Aug. 11.—Entente warships since yesterday have been bombarding the Turkish batteries along the coast of Asia Minor, according to a dispatch from Athens to the Exchange Telegraph company. British monitors have successfully reduced to silence one of the Turkish batteries and have destroyed an airdome installed near another.

BRITISH CLOSE TO LENS.

Canadian Army Headquarters in France, Aug. 11.—Raiding parties under protection of a heavy barrage fire early Thursday morning on a front of more than 2,000 yards, penetrated enemy positions in the Cite du Moulin and St. Laurent sectors, returning with prisoners. The troops engaged were from Ontario. Their casualties were slight.

At some points the trenches were found to have been pounded out of all resemblance to defensive positions. Heavy guns had blown out many dugouts.

KILL CRIPPLED CHILD WHO WAS A BURDEN

St. Johnsbury, Vt., Aug. 11.—The body of Alice Bradshaw, the little cripple believed to have been murdered July 5 because she was a "bother," has been found on the border of a swamp about a mile from her father's house, in Lyndon.

Search for the little girl was begun July 6, after the county officials had stated that Miss Etta May Hicks, housekeeper for John Bradshaw, the child's father, and Mrs. Alvin Kennis- ton, had confessed they killed the child because she was a bother.

The cause of the child's death could not be determined in a preliminary examination.

Alice was left a cripple as a result of an attack of infantile paralysis a year ago. Her mother died when she was a baby.

CORN FUTURES TRADE BARRED IN KANSAS CITY

Kansas City, Mo., Aug. 11.—Future trading in corn has been forbidden on the Kansas City board of trade at a meeting of the board of directors. The right to close up existing contracts was given. The action, however, does not in any way affect cash trading. E. D. Bigelow, secretary of the board, said resolution is effective until further action is taken.

On Hand!

By George Elmer Cobb

(Copyright, by W. G. Chapman.)

"You will find your investment well worth its price," proclaimed Eros Mott, itinerant palm-reader and faker extraordinary. "Indices of character, sir, the formation and lines of the human hand. I have drawn two hands in pencil outline from the original A, name Valerius Stark, your senior clerk, I infer."

John Murdock, village banker, nodded assentingly.

"B, Willis Thorpe, junior clerk. Well, sir, here is a note; that index finger. It shows power. A-note that tapering small finger, concentration. Ah, sir, believe me, that hand will do something in the world."

"Well, yes, Mr. Stark is a capable, industrious young man. I am pleased at the report of your observations, for I know little of his antecedents or predilection."

"B—Willis Thorpe," and the speaker shook his head dubiously. "Short fingers, squat thumb. Inclined to mass flexibly, which shows—what? Acquisition. What he goes after he will try to get. Should say that such a hand, idly strolling into a casual bag of gold, might cling tenaciously to the coins. Ahem! Thanks!" and Eros Mott pocketed his fee and departed. Val Stark, politic, suave, hypocritical, had been most courteous to him. Willis Thorpe, free and easy and skeptical, had laughed at him. So the faker had given rope to his prejudices and had done the young man a bad turn.

At his desk in the little counting room of the bank, Stark waved his hand in gracious adieu to the professor of palmistry, taking pains to flash conspicuously the glittering solitaire it bore. Thorpe, with the joyous ribaldry of a cheery nature, deliberately winked at the retiring "scientist" and, doubling his fist, showed a hard, knotty "bunch of fives." Somehow, in a casual way, Mr. Murdock that day recited his investment in advanced palmistry to a director of the institution. The messenger boy overheard the conversation, and, chuckling, retailed it to Thorpe and Stark.

"The fellow his given me quite a boost," chirruped the gratified Stark.

"He doesn't seem to fancy me," observed Willis jollily. "I'd be willing to show him the 'power' in my knuckles, if that would change the oracle."

It was an ideal evening when Willis called on Myra, the pretty and vivacious daughter of his employer. He fancied that the latter received him stiffly, but he forgot all about that as he wandered about the garden, chatting with his sweetly harmonious companion. It was a night of gentle breezes and sweet sounds of the lilac bloom freighted the air. It was paradise complete, until Stark arrived. He was willowy and bland, Willis, blunt and direct. The banker drew the contrast sharply. He smiled on Stark. The rigmarole of the palmist had made an impression on his practical mind, and Willis began to note after that a decided change in the treatment of the father of his fair enamorata.

Then two weeks in succession upon the evening when the clerks were invited to the Murdock home, Willis found himself sent on a bank mission to the next town and missed seeing Myra. The second evening away, however, was worth his while, sorrowfully as he regretted his absence from the side of the girl he adored. He was waiting for the eleven o'clock train, seated on a truck on the depot platform, when he pricked up his ears at the mention of a name. It was "Stark."

"He's to meet us here and arrange for the come-off of the deal tomorrow night, is Stark," were the words borne to the hearing of Willis from the lips of one of two men seated on a crate.

"Agreed to hand us the coin if we make ourselves scarce and don't give his past away to the guy he's working for?"

"Not till he's worked the guy," came the response. "He wants us to help him. He'd stay and marry the daughter of the boss, only his wife has found out about him and likely to turn up any day, so—ha! ha! Go and ask father, the young maiden said, but she knew that he knew her father was dead, and he knew that she knew the life that he led. Oh! but he's after a comfortable lot of the shekels before he skips. Come on, there's the policeman. We don't want to be seen hanging around here."

All the way home the mind of Willis dwelt on the mysterious allusions of the two strangers. He had just a mere glimmering of the truth, but his suspicions were deeply aroused. There could be only one conception of the dark hint imparted, that Stark was not what he seemed to be and was in collusion with men who had some secret, forcing a climax in his affairs.

It was not only sinister, but alarming. Yet Willis was undecided as to what course he should pursue. He had no positive evidence that Stark meditated any wrongdoing. He and Willis were theoretically love and business rivals, and if he went to Mr. Murdock with his story the latter would naturally attribute the action to jealousy or malice.

"Something's wrong, I feel sure," ruminated Willis, "but I can do only one thing—watch."

Twice during the week Stark secretly disappeared from town. Willis believed he had gone to the town where he had seen the two men. He did not follow him, for he was not sure of his premises. Then the crisis in the enterprise was forced by the progress of routine results. On the last day of each month the bank delivered a bulk remittance covering clearings to its principal correspondent bank at Wickton. At the present time the balance represented a large sum in favor of the Wickton institution. Two days before the delivery Willis knew that Mr. Murdock and Stark intended making the trip in an automobile. He also knew that the strong box containing the money held something over thirty thousand dollars.

By sheer accident the morning of the 30th, Willis passed the desk of Stark just as the latter was called to the window by a client depositor. Glancing at a half-finished telegram blank upon which Stark had been engaged when interrupted, he read the words: "Nine-thirty, sharp, one mile east on the Thurston side road."

"I guess it'" soliloquized Willis, as he studied over the words he had read. "The wire is for the two men I overheard. One mile east of the main road, time, nine-thirty. I'll be there."

It was a clear moonlight night when Mr. Murdock and Stark left the bank, the strong box between them on the front seat of the automobile, which Stark drove. The latter kept up a brisk conversation. When he turned from the main thoroughfare, Mr. Murdock exclaimed:

"Hold on! Where are you going?"

"Short cut, and the running is just as good."

A mile progressed, the machine came to a halt. The palmist had predicted that those hands of the wily Stark "would do something in the world." They did it now. They seized the banker suddenly by the throat. They beat him back as their owner hissed out:

"Fumble for the key to that box, or I'll choke you!" and then two men darted from the near shrubbery, the accomplices of the rascally senior bank clerk.

The robbery had seemed so easy that the scoundrels had not thought weapons necessary. Willis, fearless, an hour or two previous, posted so near to the two lurkers that he could catch the echo of their conversation. He proceeded at once into doughty action.

"Biff! bang! thud! Those strong hands of his shot out like the instruments of power that they were. The two men went reeling and then prostrate, Stark, just about to receive the key to the strong box from the banker, was seized and hurled out of the machine, senseless. Then grind—zip! Springing to the wheel, Willis drove banker and box in a whirl of dust down the lonely country road.

When John Murdock recovered from the shock of it all, he grasped the honest, sinewy hand of Willis Thorpe with fervor. He shuddered at the memory of the fine Italian hand of the vanished Stark. It was an opportune moment for Willis to solicit the hand of the lovely Myra, and it all resulted from his being "on hand" at the critical moment.

Health Drinking Customs.

At Charles II.'s court began the custom, long since abandoned, of drinking but one-half of the goblet of wine, refilling and handing it to the person whose health had been drunk, and Hume, Broughton and Thackeray have in turn described with terse power the pretty custom among the Jacobite noblemen at royal banquets of the early Georgian days of covertly passing their wine glasses over the bowls in secret loyalty to the king over the water, thus compromising with their consciences. And it was for this reason that finger bowls were tabooed at royal tables until the time of Edward VII.

Two Speedy Classes.

"He belongs to a fast class."

"Which fast class?"

"Are there more than one."

"Yes, two. There's the class that spend their money faster than they make it, and the other crowd that make their money faster than they can spend it."

EDITORIAL COMMENT

We always make a noise like first class printing, it is second nature to us.

We hear that one young man claimed exemption because he was gun shy.

This is some hot weather; also more auto loads going north to quench their thirst.

Bathing has not been very popular the past week; nice weather we had—for furs we mean.

What about that new Road Patrol law? Looks like it is getting about as much attention as our recent Sunday closing farce.

The coal price is not coming down as fast as it was supposed to; the only place we know of where it is coming down is in the coal chutes; we mean the coal, not the price.

A good old lady, age 102 years, and residing in the eastern part of the state, is doing her bit by knitting socks for our soldiers. She knows how to make real socks, too; but that reminds us, how would you like to wear some of the socks that our girls are practising on for the soldiers?

News from the Hardin county front reports that N. M. Victor of Ackley has threshed out 105 bushels of oats per acre from his fields. The variety was "Iowa 105." "After all's said and done, I believe we'll find that Iowa has produced a record oat crop this year," says the farm crops extension man at Iowa State college.

Samples of Ancient Days.

Down to comparatively recent times every little girl worked her sampler and examples of seventeenth-century work are still found and are the objects of the collector's search. They usually contain the alphabet, the worker's name, the date, Bible texts, mottoes and pious admonitions, the whole surrounded by an ornamental border of some conventional design. The earliest sampler in existence is said to bear the date of 1643 and is in the South Kensington museum, London.

IOWA STATE FAIR AND EXPOSITION

DES MOINES, AUGUST 22-31

Iowa's Sixty-Third Annual Exposition of Industry and Resources

CONSIDER A FEW OF THE NUMERCUS FEATURES that help to make the IOWA STATE FAIR the most perfectly-balanced and the most thoroly enjoyable of any and all the great expositions of agriculture and livestock in the country.

THE MOST BEAUTIFUL EXHIBIT

At the State Fair last year was the great HORN OF PLENTY pouring forth its mighty tide of GOLDEN CORN, symbolic of Iowa's right to be called THE LAND OF PLENTY. Will be reproduced again this year in all its glory.

THE AGRICULTURAL BUILDING

Will be a great exposition in itself, alone and apart from all else, with its exhibits of field, orchard and garden. County Exhibits, individual farm exhibits, displays of grains, grasses, vegetables, fruits, flowers, etc., etc.

IOWA'S OWN GREAT STOCK SHOW

Iowa is the center of the meat-producing territory and, naturally, owners of purebred stock from all over the country plan to show at the IOWA FAIR. Will be greater than ever this year because of unusually prosperous conditions in the livestock world.

THE IOWA HEN AND HER FAMILY

Will attend the fair this year in a body. Last year they laid more than 1,000,000 DOZEN eggs. This year they expect to beat even that record, but several thousand of them will take a vacation and attend the BIGGEST POULTRY SHOW OF THE YEAR IN IOWA.

A TRACTOR SHOW AND DEMONSTRATION

That will make any and all shows of the kind held in Des Moines in other years look like cheap imitations. More than thirty different styles and models of tractors will be on exhibition and put thru their paces.

EVERYBODY'S MOUTH

Is busy these days with the all-absorbing topic, FOOD CONSERVATION. For ten days the fair grounds will be turned into a great FOOD EFFICIENCY CAMP. Experts from Washington and Ames will be in charge to teach up-to-date methods of curing, canning, preserving and drying.

SIXTY ACRES OF FARM MACHINERY

Threshers, ditchers, road-building machinery, silo accessories and labor-saving implements and appliances of a thousand varieties, for indoor and outdoor workers.

AUTO SHOW OF 1918 MODELS

If you are planning to buy a new car this fall or winter the STATE FAIR AUTO SHOW is the place to study the 1918 MODELS, which will all be shown for the first time.

A SPECIAL FEATURE

Will be the show of auto accessories and motor trucks which will be located in Machinery Hall just across the street from the Auto Show. Everything needful in the way of repairs for autos and tractors; big exhibit of trailers.

A NICE HEALTHY BABY

Is the nicest thing in the world. Iowa has more thrifty babies than anybody and will prove it by the BABY HEALTH CONTEST, which is only another name for BABY SHOW—with trimmings in the way of daily lectures, movie shows, demonstrations, educational exhibits and plain talks, all along the line of up-to-date baby culture.

HUNDREDS OF OTHER FEATURES OF INTEREST—County Agricultural Exhibits—Highway Commission Exhibits—Domestic Science Exhibits—School Exhibits—Boys' Judging Contests—Livestock Parades—Individual Farm Exhibits—Home Canning Club Work—Horticultural Exhibits—Industrial Exhibits—State Institutions Exhibit—Wild Game Exhibits—etc., etc., etc.

A HINT TO AUTO BUYERS.

Dear Reader, are you planning to treat yourself to a new automobile some time within the coming year? If so, we offer a hint or two, which, possibly, has not occurred to you.

A world-wide war is in progress, with practically all the civilized nations of the earth involved. War is inexpressibly destructive, regarded from any and every point of view. The first and most terrible toll is human life. The next is the destruction of the world's available supply of iron, copper, tin, zinc and other necessary commodities. When foodstuffs are consumed or destroyed they can be replaced and replenished indefinitely from year to year as the fair earth yields their bounty. But the minerals and metals taken from the earth and destroyed can never be renewed nor made to grow again. When a locomotive, an airship, a great steel battleship or piece of machinery of any kind is blown to smithereens the materials used in construction are gone for the balance of time. And right there lies one of war's greatest extravagances, perhaps the greatest. Supplies of this kind are being drawn upon and destroyed at such an alarming rate that the thoughtful-minded may well worry for the future.

Do you see the point? Then why not make your plans to attend the state fair, study the big automobile show with its 1918 styles and models and place your order for a new car while prices are still fairly moderate. The man who thinks he will be able to buy an auto—or any other piece of machinery, for that matter—cheaper next year than he can buy it now is making a wild guess, as he will discover if he postpones the purchase.

The auto show at the state fair will easily eclipse any event of the kind yet seen in Iowa, and the new models which will be on exhibition will not be in evidence at any auto show until sometime in the spring of 1918. A hint to the wise is generally sufficient.

NO CHANGE IN PRICE OF ADMISSION.

Tickets to the state fair appear to be about the only things left that have not gone rocketing into the skies of exorbitant prices. There will be no change whatever, except that the visitor will get more for his money than ever before. Adults 50 cents; children between 8 and 15 years, 25 cents; general admission after 5 p. m., 25 cents.

MODERN WARFARE.

The United States is actually engaged in war. Somehow we find it hard to grasp the fact and face it, notwithstanding the many evidences on all sides. Some of the regulars are already on the firing line in France and Uncle Sam's battleships are helping the allies in the strenuous job of policing the high seas.

It has been nineteen years since Uncle Sam tangled with Spain and lifted the burden of cruelty and oppression from Cuba and the Philippines, and more than fifty years since the North and the South resorted to arms to settle certain disputes and misunderstandings. Meantime methods of carrying on the horrid trade of war have changed entirely. Doubtless it is proper to say "progressed" in this connection, because the destruction of life and property has become a thousand times more deadly.

Only a meager proportion of Uncle Sam's 100,000,000 citizens will actually get within sight and sound of the dreadful tragedy being enacted across the Atlantic. The rest will have to acquire knowledge and information through the medium of the printed page, the camera and demonstrations in the line of open-air pageants.

Of the latter the spectacular production entitled, "Modern Warfare" to be staged at the coming state fair, takes precedence over all other means of enlightenment for showing actual methods of warfare. Blowing up forts, bombarding cities, battles between powerful air machines will be shown. Also trench fighting and the up-to-date war enginery in the way of siege guns, tanks, etc.

The troops engaged in this mimic warfare will be correctly costumed to represent the different nations, and it will all be very thrilling, very realistic and give the onlooker a much clearer idea of how war is actually conducted than volumes of printed matter could do. This spectacle will be presented every night during the fair, staged in the centerfield in front of the amphitheatre.

STATE FAIR TOO BIG TO SEE IN ONE DAY.

No use killing yourself off trying to see the whole of the Iowa State Fair in one day. It can't be accomplished. The most sensible way is to camp on the grounds a few days and do the big show in comfort.

JUNITA MORRISON,
The Daring Young Lady Auto Driver, Entered at 1917 Iowa State Fair.

GRAND OPERA SINGERS FOR THE STATE FAIR.

Lovers of good music who visit the Iowa State Fair this year will be given an unusual treat by the famous Thaviu Band and Grand Opera singers. This is one of the most noted and high-class musical organizations before the American public. They were selected above all others for both the opening and the closing ceremonies at the late Panama-Pacific Exposition, an honor by no means insignificant. They are in constant demand, dated months in advance, and the state fair management was fortunate in getting a contract for fair week.

All the favorite operas, old and new, will be rendered, as well as the popular vocal hits of the day. A company of versatile dancers is included in the organization, and the characteristic steps and dances of all nations will be presented, the dancers attired in the different national costumes. Open-air concerts will be given forenoons, afternoons and evenings throughout the fair.

OBSERVE CHILDREN'S DAY.

Friday, August 24, will be Children's Day at the state fair. All the little folk under fifteen years admitted free, and the fair management would be pleased to see not less than fifty thousand of them swarming over the grounds.

Characteristics of Famous Men.

When I meet a famous man I note that all he has is a little sense, a little politeness and a disposition to look after things. Many famous men are very ordinary, except that they are unusual in the respects noted.—E. W. Howe's Monthly.

How Moving Signs Work.

In a general way, the mechanism of a moving electric sign is like the old-time music box drum, filled with pins. As the drum revolves the pins make the contacts at determined intervals, and the illusions of revolving circles of light, bird effects and designs almost without limit are produced.

TIMELY TIPS FOR THE WEEK

Plan your trip to the state fair.

The silo makes a good tower for the farm water tank.

Well dented corn makes profitable silage. Wait for it to dent.

Work the turnip ground fine, roll it and sow after the first rain.

Keep cream in clean, cold water or in a refrigerator until ready for delivery.

Cut out old fruiting canes in the berry patch. Later, pinch back the raspberry tips.

Larkspurs and many herbaceous plants would flower next spring from seed sown now.

Cut sweet clover seed when pods are straw colored and two-thirds of seed are mature.

Corn and oats grown on the same field in alternate does not make a good rotation.

Cut the tops of asparagus plants close to the ground during the latter part of the month. Burn them.

Early and deep plowing, destruction of volunteer wheat and late seeding aid in controlling the Hessian fly.

Take a look at the school house the next time you drive by it. If it is not in good order, start something with the directors.

Reduce winter killing of wheat by using well drained land, preparing the seed bed early and thoroughly and drilling hardy varieties.

Just because onion tops usually fall over and sprawl on the ground when the crop is good is no reason why growers should knock them over or cut them off to make them do well. It won't. It will harm them, says the extension crops man at Ames.

Extinction of the Buffalo.

The following statement concerning the buffalo was made by Dr. W. T. Hornaday, director of the New York Zoological park: "It is by no means true that the extermination of the buffalo is due mostly to the encroachment of human beings on their feeding grounds, rather than to their wholesale slaughter. The great bison herds of the plains, from Saskatchewan to Texas, were all of them exterminated by systematic robe hunting, hide hunting in summer, killing for tongues, and slaughter for all other excuses imaginable. This occurred long before any of their ranges were wanted by man either for cattle grazing or for agriculture. The legitimate industries of man played no part whatever in the extermination of the bison, either West or East. The slaughter was systematic and deliberate, and far in advance of the agriculturist and stock grower."

Peculiar Superstition.

If fake teeth could talk, they would tell strange tales. A farmer's wife attributed her good luck with a certain kind of delicious cooky for which she was famous to the fact that the mold with which she always cut out the cookies was a set of false teeth willed to her by an aunt who, in her time, had been able to cook to beat the band. Success crowned her culinary efforts because she worked with this weird and unwieldy crescent of worn-out teeth. Thus doth superstition lead us captive!

Or Stored Hen Eggs.

A family in a small town kept a few chickens and often had eggs from their own yard. One morning as the seven-year-old of the family came to breakfast he noticed the eggs on the table and inquired, "Mamma, are these store eggs or hen eggs?"—The Christian Herald.

The Country Girl

By Mary Parrish

(Copyright, by W. G. Chapman.)

"Get onto the new girl in the socks!" Which being interpreted meant: "Notice the new saleslady in the ladies' hosiery department."

"Yes," responded Mazie Snow, at the ribbons. "She's from the country, all right."

Rachel Beck paused to extract a wad of gum from her mouth, and carefully fastened it to the under side of the counter, then she drawled: "How do you know?"

"How do I know?" snorted Mazie. "Well, if you've lived over twenty years on this planet, and can't spot a jay from Jaytown, you'd better go back and get incarcerated over again."

"I haven't lived twenty years yet on this planet, and I've never been incarcerated—to my knowledge!" answered Rachel resentfully.

"I guess Mazie was trying to say you'd better get 'reincarnated,' and got balled up in her Webster."

"Oh," said Rachel, somewhat mollified. "Well, if I were Mazie I wouldn't try to monkey with big words. Well, Hazel looks sort of nice, anyway."

"So you've got on chinning terms so quick!" put in Sarah Stempel, the first speaker.

"I just heard her telling the floorwalker her name, and he seemed to be taking notice like he'd got his first tooth."

"She wants to look out for that guy," observed Mazie evening up some boxes with a bang. "Gee! look at her smile at that customer. She'll get over that before six o'clock."

But Hazel didn't "get over it." She was always smiling and good-natured; and that may have been the reason why the floorwalker went on "taking notice."

Mazie Snow having at one time been on exceedingly good terms with the floorwalker, and now no longer on such terms, had taken occasion to warn the other girls to beware of his doubtful attentions, and some of them having had real cause to suspect these gentlemen on general principles, were ready to take Mazie's advice to not let Mr. Welch get "fresh." So it was with something akin to alarm that Rachel and Sarah beheld the increasing friendliness of the floorwalker to little Hazel.

"That kid's too green and unbaked to be let to go wrong," observed Sarah to the other two girls one morning after Hazel told her that Mr. Welch had taken her to the movies.

"I think," said Rachel, "you ought to tell her to keep carbon tabs on his nibs, and not fall for the first dope he offers."

"Oh, yes, tell her," laughed Mazie in the satirical tone of a blase rounder. "It'll do a lot of good, won't it? I guess she knows what she's throwing bait for. I saw her with a new one last Sunday, and say, girls! he was the nifty goods!"

Hazel began to get some rather cold shoulders from the girls, all but Rachel Beck, who still clung to her impression that the newcomer looked "sort of nice." Acting on this impression, she drew from Hazel some information about herself. She had come from the country. Her father had a small fruit farm, but had lately lost a good deal of money, and Hazel had come down to the city in the hope of lightening his load. She took Sarah's advice about the floorwalker in good part, but declared she had seen nothing so far in him but the most gentlemanly conduct. Hazel opened her eyes so wide in surprise at Rachel's warning, she expected to be resentfully told to mind her own business, but instead the girl answered: "I think it's real good and friendly of you, Rachel. I wish you'd come home to dinner with me some time. I get awful lonesome nights, there all alone in my room."

Rachel accepted the invitation to the boarding house table, and in turn invited Hazel to share the hospitality of father and mother and the four small Becks.

One Monday morning Mazie Snow, with the important air of one who has some surprising news, asked the two girls, Rachel and Sarah, if they had seen the gorgeous new outfit of Hazel. Neither of them had.

"Well," said Mazie, "if you'd seen the dress she had on! Satin—no cheap rags—the sort that hangs like a fashion plate, and a coat they ain't marking down from thirty-five. The hat wasn't home trimming nor Fourteenth street, neither. I was that knocked silly I didn't half bow, but I guess she didn't mind much. I don't care what any of you say, those gladsome garments weren't cashed up out of eight dollars a week."

Sarah looked unutterable things, and curtly observed she hadn't been able to do that kind of a conjuring trick; but Rachel turned sadly away, saying nothing. If the girl she had learned to really care for had gone wrong, it was something too pitiful for words.

Rachel went the next Sunday to see Hazel, and found her just leaving the house with a young man, evidently the one Mazie had described as "the nifty goods." Hazel seemed in high spirits, and looked exceedingly charming in the aforesaid "gladsome garments." She asked Rachel to come with them. But Rachel felt decidedly out of place with the stylish, well-groomed pair, and declined.

The next news to startle the ribbon counter was that Hazel was leaving the store, and the following day she bade the girls good-by. When they asked her where she was going she answered she was going home. None of them believed her. She drew Rachel's arm in hers as they left the store, and said: "They just want to think the worst of me! Well, I don't care what they think! But you, Rachel, are different. You're going to have your vacation in about a month, aren't you?"

"Yes," she answered.

"I want you to come out for a few days. I'll write you how to come, and send you the fare; will you?"

Rachel promised, but it must be confessed she wondered a bit if she would ever again see Hazel. But the money for the fare, and the invitation for a certain date came on time.

When Rachel next appeared among the girls at the store she was the center of an awesome group.

"You just ought to see that house," she said, "great big rooms with ever so many windows, and my! such things to eat! And your plate piled up over and over just as though no one was worrying about the high cost of living. There was flowers in all the rooms, and everyone sort of excited, and Hazel said they were going to have a party. Hazel's father and mother are awful nice, and her father is doing real well now. Her mother sent the money to buy those clothes you saw her have on. Well, to get back to the party. A whole lot of people began to come, and well, say, girls, you could have bowled me over with a feather when I saw his nobs, the floorwalker, and Mr. Fraser, she had introduced to me that day. Say, they're cousins, and that's how she got the job. The next thing I saw was Welch making a sort of pathway through the people from the hall door up to the front window, then he and the 'nifty' one walking up together and standing beside a man with a book in his hand. Then music behind somewhere started up the wedding march, and in comes Hazel looking as sweet as a peach in a perfect dream of a dress, veil, orange blossoms, and all, her father leading her to it."

"Which one did she marry?" chorused the girls.

"Why, Fraser, the 'nifty one,' of course. Welch was only the best man. But I tell you he did look some swell—and he was awful nice to me."

ACTION COST CHAUFFEUR TIP

Little Joke Practiced on "Newlyweds" Caused Resentment in Young Husband's Breast.

The chauffeur who was to drive the newly wedded couple from the church to the station liked to "kid" one along. So when they stepped into the taxi he was prominently adjusting his little mirror in front.

The bridegroom was worried. So he noticed the young man fixing the mirror. He was suspicious. Yes, he should have been suspicious, for the horrid man was fixing that mirror so that he could see right back into the back seat.

The bride breathlessly settled down for the short ride. But dear Henry did not offer one post-nuptial caress. He was very formal and still.

The young bride had heard of deserting husbands, but Henry seemed so nice and so in earnest. Could Henry be one of those—"

The car stopped and the couple alighted. The bridegroom blushed deeply as he handed the taxi driver his fee. But no tip. He would show the horrid thing. Pullman porters were not so inquisitive.—Indianapolis News.

"My wife gave me a letter to mail."

"Did you remember to do it?"

METROPOLIS OF THE WILDS

Spokane, City of a Hundred and Fifty Thousand People, Has Good Trout Fishing Within Limits.

A city of a hundred and fifty thousand people that has good trout fishing within its city limits and Indians living in their tepees a mile and a half away is something that you cannot grasp unless you know the West. And even if you do, Spokane would strike you as something of a surprise. It looks as though it had been built yesterday in what was a virgin wilderness the day before- and yet made complete with street cars and electric lights and everything that you could find in a New England town except perhaps, the cultured atmosphere.

The Spokaneites do not miss the cultured atmosphere. If you asked about it they would probably tell you that they prefer the smell of the pines. For they are an outdoors-living crew. A director in Spokane may attend a board of directors' meeting in the heart of the city at 10 a. m. and at 4 p. m. he may be hunting bear. The mountains crowd right down upon the city, the forests are full of bears within a radius of a hundred miles.

Spokane like Rome was not built in a day—but it was set up at a rate that makes all of those old saws about how long it takes to do things look hollow and meaningless. It was only in 1858 that the Indians got their first decisive defeat in this region and the first locomotive arrived in 1881. By 1890 they had something of a town started but it was wiped out by fire that year.

The real growth began when the river was turned into electric power—170,000 horse. From this giant dynamo electricity reaches out through the canyons to hundreds of mines, driving the power trains into the bowels of the mountains, bringing wealth to the city, which sits like a spider at the center of its mighty web or current.

The DESTROYER

"I must warn you again, Brisson, and you, Madame," he said, severely, "that of this not a single word must be breathed—to no one. Let it pass from your minds as though it had never been. It is an affair of high diplomacy; and you might suffer much were it known that you are concerned in it. In behalf of France, I thank you, and I shall have care that your so great service is brought to the attention of the proper persons. But remember—not a word!

Monsieur and Madame were faithful—only in the seclusion of their bedroom, with the light extinguished, and in bated whispers, did they ever discuss it. And, as at this point they pass from this story, let it be added that, some months later, a parcel was delivered at their door, which, when opened, was found to contain a handsome vase of Sevres. Inside the vase was a card, "To Monsieur and Madame Aristide Brisson, from Theophile Delcasse, as a slight recognition of their services to France."

It would be impossible to say which this worthy couple valued most highly, the vase or the card. Certain it is that, if you are ever a guest at the du Nord, you will be shown both of them, the vase in a velvet lined case against the wall and the card, neatly framed, just below it. And, in consideration of their increased importance, Monsieur and Madame have considered themselves justified in increasing their tariff 10 per cent.

As soon as Lepine and Crochard were alone together, the former took the photograph from his pocket, looked at the number on the back, and then consulted a typewritten list of names. Then, with a hand not wholly steady, he handed the list to his companion.

"Number 18," he said.

Opposite that number Crochard read, "Admiral H. Pachman, chief of the wireless service," and then he gazed at the photograph long and earnestly, as though impress it indelibly upon his mind.

CHAPTER VIII

THE SECOND INSTALLATION

The board of inquiry began its sessions that afternoon, at the prefecture of marine. It was composed of the most distinguished officers of France, who had donned for the occasion their most brilliant uniforms. There was much paraphernalia secretaries, portfolios, red taped papers, reports—all that display so dear to the French temperament, and every one wore an air of importance and solemnity befitting time and place.

M. Delcasse opened the session with a ringing speech, forming a notable contrast to the platitudes uttered by the president in the morning. In fact, it was so bold in its allusions to an approaching struggle with "the implacable enemy of the republic," that the members of the board glanced covertly at each other in astonishment. Their astonishment was the greater because, as they well knew, M. Delcasse was not given to indiscretions. At least, his indiscretions were always nicely calculated ones. He knew when to speak and when to hold his tongue—none better; and the fact that he thought it necessary to speak now proved that the affair was serious indeed. At the end of the speech, the board proceeded in a body to an inspection of the wreck.

Lepine, meanwhile, armed with the description Crochard had given him, set his men to work to discover the dwelling place of the white haired stranger who had been seen passing back and forth along the road outside the city gate. But, to his chagrin, evening came and his men had discovered nothing. It is true that the investigation was rendered more than usually difficult by the fact that the town was still in an uproar, and no one wished to speak of anything but the disaster. For the moment, the memories of the people went no farther back than dawn of the previous day. In a day or two, when the first excitement had passed, there would be a much better chance of success.

So, at least, reasoned Inspector Pigot, whose watchward was always patience! But the reasoning did not satisfy Lepine. Patience was not always a virtue. In this affair, it was impossible to wait a day or two. With every hour, no doubt, the man they sought was putting fresh leagues between himself and his pursuers. Crochard, so Lepine told himself miserably, Crochard would not wait a day or two. Perhaps, already * * *

He put on his hat and sought the Cafe de Voyageurs. Choosing the seat which he had occupied that morning, he ordered a liqueur and sat for an hour contemplating the crowd. Again he perceived that the proprietor was absent; but this time the head waiter did not approach, or even meet his glance. He thought, for a moment, of calling him and asking for Crochard; but he finally decided that that would be too great an indiscretion. Besides, as Crochard had pointed out, in this affair it was Lepine who followed. It was for him to receive instructions, not to give them. At last, with a feeling of depression and dependency quite new to him, the great detective left the cafe, returned to his hotel and went to bed.

But early next morning, things began to move again. He had scarcely finished his breakfast, when a summons came from M. Delcasse to attend him at once, and when Lepine entered his office, he saw that something of importance had occurred. Delcasse already had a visitor—a tall, thin man, dressed severely in black with the word "banker" written all over him. Lepine was therefore not surprised when the visitor was introduced to him as the manager of the Toulon branch of the Bank of France.

"We have something of interest here," said Delcasse, and tossed over to Lepine two notes for 100 francs each.

The later's eyes were shining as he picked them up, glanced at their numbers, and then compared them with a third note which he took from his pocketbook.

"They are of the same series," he said. "Where did you get them 'sir' and he turned to the bank manager.

"They were deposited with us by the cashier of the central railway station."

"When?"

"On the afternoon of Monday, the 25th."

"How did you discover them?"

"We received instructions yesterday from Paris to report immediately the receipt of any notes of this series. Our cashier, while checking up our deposits yesterday evening, happened upon these notes, and identified them as a part of the railway deposit of the day before. The matter was reported to me, and I at once forwarded the report to Paris. This morning I received a telegram instructing me to report in person to M. Delcasse, and I hastened to do so."

"You have done well, sir," said the minister, "and I thank you. We will ask you to exchange these notes for two others, and furthermore to say nothing to any one of this discovery or of having seen me."

The exchange was made, the banker departed, and Lepine, with the notes in his pocketbook, hastened away to the Gare Centrale. Arrived there, he asked for the chief, introduced himself, and stated his business.

"I have here two notes," he said, "which were deposited by your cashier last Monday afternoon. It is most important that I find out from whom this money was received, and to what point tickets were purchased. The purchase was made, no doubt, some time during Monday."

"The money might have been received Sunday," the chef-du-gare pointed out. "Since the bank is closed Sunday, we can make no deposit on that day."

"I have reason to believe it was not received until Monday," said Lepine. "May I interrogate the cashiers, beginning with the one who was on duty at daybreak Monday?"

"There are two men on duty at all hours," explained the chief; "and each trick is eight hours in length. The first begins at 6 o'clock in the morning. At which hour was daybreak on Monday?"

"At 5 o'clock and 49 minutes."

"The clerks who were in the bureau at that hour are not here now, but I can have them called."

"Let us interrogate the ones who are here," suggested Lepine. "Perhaps it will not be necessary to disturb the others."

The chief pressed a button and summoned the ticket sellers, one after the other. The first had no recollection of having received the notes, but with his companion Lepine was more successful.

Yes, yes, I remember them perfectly," he said, when they were shown to him. "My attention was called to them because they were both quite new. I looked at them closely to make certain that they were genuine, and noticed that they were numbered consecutively. Another detail which caused them to remain in my memory was the striking appearance of the person who gave them to me."

Lepine's heart was throbbing with triumph.

"Describe this man," he said.

"Ah, sir," said the clerk, "that is just it. It was not a man, but a girl—a girl of 18 or 20. That is what drew my attention. It is not usual to have a girl like that ask for two tickets, second class, to Paris."

"A girl!" stammered Lepine. "You are sure?"

"Perfectly sure, sir."

"Well, describe her, then."

The clerk half closed his eyes in order the better to vizualize his memory.

"She was, as I have said, of about 19, and she was not a Frenchwoman."

"How do you know that?"

"Because, in the first place, she spoke French not very well; and, in the second place, there was in her manner an assurance, a freedom from embarrassment, which a French girl of her station would not possess."

"Was she light or dark?"

"She was dark, sir, with bright black eyes, with which she looked at one very steadily. She was slightly built, of medium height, simply dressed, so far as I could see through the little window, not fashionably, with with good effect. However, what impressed me most was her calm assurance—almost American; but she was too dark to be of America."

Reading between the lines, Lepine suspected that the clerk had attempted to start a flirtation with the selfpossessed unknown, and had been rebuffed. And yet, what he said was true—young girls in France were not, ordinarily, entrusted with the buying of railway tickets, especially for so considerable a journey.

"You are sure the tickets were to Paris?"

Yes, sir: second class. I remember distinctly giving her 64 francs in change."

"At what hour was this?"

"About 8 o'clock, sir."

"Of Monday morning?"

"Yes, sir: of Monday morning."

"At what hour was the next train for Paris?"

"At 8:15, sir, the express departs."

"The girl had no companion?"

"I saw none, sir."

"She certainly had a companion, or she would not have bought two tickets."

"Perhaps the inspector at the gate can tell us something," the chief suggested, and the clerk was dismissed and the inspector summoned. But he could give them no information. There had been many passengers for the express, and, besides, every one, himself included, was so distressed and overwrought by the catastrophe of the morning that there had not been the usual attention to detail. The inquiry was extended to the baggage porters, but with no better success. They, too, had been upset by the disaster and had thought of nothing else. Some of them had frankly deserted their posts in order to hasten to the harbor front. None of those who remained had noticed a white haired man and a dark haired girl.

"Come!" said Lepine savagely to himself, as he left the station. "This is not getting ahead—we must try the cabs. But first * * *"

He turned toward the prefecture and quickened his steps, for suddenly he scented a new danger. This white haired man, then, was in the pay of Germany. He had destroyed La Liberte for a price—an immense price, no doubt! And now he had gone to Paris. From there, where would he go? To Brest, perhaps, to work similar mischief there. Lepine shivered a little. The best men he had left at Paris must be sent to Brest with instructions to arrest the fugitives at sight. Two people, so unusual in appearance, would find it difficult to avoid the police in so small a town. But in Paris—that was different. Yet even there something might be done. And then there was always chance, divine chance, which might, at any moment, deliver them into his hands. Ah, if only he were strolling along the boulevards, looking into this face and that!

"Decidedly, I must be getting back!" Lepine murmured; and, having arrived at the prefecture, he sent a long telegram to his assistant at Paris and another to the prefect at Brest. Then he summoned Pigot. "You will interrogate the cabmen at the Gare Centrale," he said, "as to which of them drove a white haired man and a dark haired girl to the station for the Paris express, Monday morning. And, understand well, Pigot, there must be no failure this time!" Then, as the door closed behind Pigot's retiring figure, he slapped himself smartly on the forehead. "I am a fool!" he cried, and hurried from the building and called a cab.

There are many dealers in electrical supplies at Toulon, and it was not until he reached the fourth one that Lepine found a ray of light. No; its proprietor had no recollection of any sales to strangers. A little white haired man? No. But stay—there had been a white haired man! No, he had bought nothing. He had had a battery recharged—a heavy battery of an unusual type. Yes, it had been delivered. One moment, and the man slowly turned the pages of his ledger, while Lepine bit his lips with impatience. Here it was—the address—80 Rue du Plasson, fourth floor.

In another moment, Lepine's cab was rattling over the cobbles in the direction of the quays.

"Faster! Faster!" he urged.

And then they were in the Rue du Plasson.

"Behold No. 80, sir," said the cabman, and pulled up sharply.

There was already a cab at the curb, and as Lepine jumped out, the door of the house opened and Pigot appeared on the threshold. He stared at his chief in astonishment.

"I was just coming to report to you, sir," he said. "The birds have flown."

"Indeed!" sneered Lepine. "So you have discovered that, have you? But the installation is here, I suppose?"

"Yes, sir," answered Pigot, very red. "On the fourth floor."

Lepine bounded up the stairs, and Pigot followed in silence. He felt that he had been used unjustly; after all, he was not a wizard—what did the chief expect!

At the top of the house, Lepine glanced first into the narrow room which we have already seen; then he returned to the landing and opened the other door. It led into a still narrower room, also extending to the front of the house, and lighted by a single window. Lepine went to the window and looked out. Over the roof of the low market across the way, he could see the harbor, the warships, and the wreck of La Liberte. Then he turned to an examination of the room.

A heavy box stood before the window, and on the floor beside it were three large batteries. Some pieces of copper wire were lying about, but there was nothing else. In the top of the box, however, four holes had been bored, as though for the reception of bolts, and one side of the box was badly burned. The sill of the window was also scorched and blistered.

"You have the proprietor of this house?" Lepine inquired.

"He is below," Piogot announced, and went to fetch him.

But from the proprietor, a nervous little man with a dirty beard, Lepine learned little. He lived at the rear of the ground floor, and 10 days or perhaps two weeks before, a man had knocked at the door and asked if the upper floor was to rent.

"What sort of man?" Lepcine inquired.

"A dark man, with white hair, sir; not a bad looking man, but not a Frenchman."

"A German, perhaps."

"No, most certainly not a German; an Italian or a Spaniard."

"What was his business?"

"He said he was an inventor and desired the top floor for his experiments. I told him that in that case I should have to charge extra, as experiments were always dangerous. He did not object, and paid a month in advance. He seemed a very harmless person."

"Was he alone?"

"At that time, yes, sir. But when he returned with his baggage, his daughter accompanied him."

"How do you know it was his daughter?"

"He told me so, sir. The resemblance was very evident. Besides, he insisted that I supply material to curtain off a portion of the room for her bed."

Her "Meatless Day."

The day after Prosecuting Attorney Horace G. Murphy and his deputies and constables made a Sunday morning raid on a Muncie "blind tiger" and arrested 50 persons found there, most of the men going to jail on various charges, the wife of one of those whose fate it was to be locked up, was confiding to Billy Blamey, the elevator man at the Wysor building, in which Murphy as his office, says the Indianapolis News.

"I'm considerably worried," she told him, "about by Sunday dinner yesterday and thought Mr. Murphy might straighten things out. You see, my husband started away from home about te no'clock in the morning to get some meat for dinner said said he intended to stop in at the club (all "tigers" are clubs in Muncie) and get a bottle of beer on the way, liek he always does Sundays. Well, he hasn't brought home meat home yet, and meat nowadays costs too much to waste."

HAY FEVER AND THE ARMY.

The United States public health service made a survey of hay fever in Louisiana. They found that almost 1 per cent of the population were subject to the disease. Louisiana is below the hay fever belt. It is generally agreed that Louisiana has less of the disease than the parts of the country to the north Based on these figures Dr Scheppegrell says that an army of 600,000 will have 6,000 hay fever sufferers in its ranks These 6,000 men will not be of much service during two months of the year

Spring and summer hay fever are due to grass pollen The pollen grains of grasses are large and heavy and the wind seldom carries them more than a mile If the grass and weeds are kept cut to a height of less than one foot in army camps and for a certain distance around them some of the men will be spared this form of hay fever

In the south and west most of the autumnal hay fever is due to the pollen from ragweed In the Pacific and Rocky Mountain states sage pollen is the principal cause The pollen from these weeds is smaller and a wind blowing more than 12 miles an hour is liable to carry them more than five miles Protecting the soldiers against autumnal hay fever in these districts will prove more difficult

It is to be remembered that three other factors are to be taken into consideration Individuals differ in their susceptibility to pollen So important is this point that many persons hold that hay fever is a neurosis and none is subject to it except persons of little stability of nerves Hay fever subjects in this group are classed with the hysterics, hypochondriacs, and other groups of the near insanse There is a treatment of hay fever based on the hypothesis.

The dose is a factor in determining the effect of pollen Some people do not succumb until the number of grains in a measured quantity of air passes a given point The tactical meaning of all this is that even if all of the weeds and grass are not kept down good is accomplished by partial efforts to control them

There seems very good ground for thinking that persons who are subject to hay fever are not fully supplied with lime Based on this theory an effort at saturation with lime is made The ordinary method of giving it is as follows

Calcium chloride [illegible] grains
Distilled water to make 1 pint
Dose 1 teaspoonful after each meal
OR
Calcium chloride [illegible] ounces
Distilled water to make 1 pint
Dose—1 teaspoonful after each meal

It is necessary to begin the treatment before the attack comes on and to continue it for weeks Some persons add the lime solution to dough and bake it into lime bread

"Playing the Bear" in Mexico.

From the World Outlook

This is the manner of courtship in Mexico A young man sees a young lady on the street whom he admires and follows her home. Having reached her casa, he begins to "play bear" by walking back and forth in front of the house or standing on the street with his eyes fixed upon her windows, for hours at a time, day and night

The Mexican young woman is shy, even if greatly interested she will remain back of the curtain By the slightest movement of the curtains or blinds she gives sign that she is not entirely indifferent After a day or two she may even show her face or wave her hands as a further mark of encouragement, and, after several days, she may appear on the balcony for a few moments. If she goes to church the lover is probably not far behind, and an occasional smile or glance from her eyes of midnight is given him as a reward for his faithfulness. Next come daily salutes and smiles when the lover appears. Flowers in which notes are concealed are sent by the aid of the water carriers or charcoal vendors.

When the courtship has so far advanced that the lovers may talk, the moonlight nights are devoted to the lovemaking and several pairs of lovers can be seen on almost any street he on the sidewalk she at the window Perhaps in the most casual way imaginable she may let her finger slip through the bars for there is just a chance that mamma may be asleep.

Later he may be invited to call at the house by the father or mother after a family council, if his antecedents are all right, for of course they have been investigated by the sagacious parents.

Control of Exports.

From the St Louis Globe Democrat

President Wilson's brief but comprehensive statement as to the purpose of the control of exports justifies the action of congress in vesting him with the power Self preservation demands supervision of such exports as are described in the proclamation embracing most articles necessary to the conduct of the war and to the support of the military and civilian population except cotton Why it was omitted is not clear All exporters must procure licenses, whether they are dealing with neutrals or with our allies These licenses must be renewed every 60 days It is presumed that the department of commerce possesses the inherent power to revoke any license at any time for cause. Heavy penalties are prescribed for violations and attempted evasions of the law The regulations and limitations are not announced These will doubtless vary as to countries and also as to articles. They will be subject to modification from time to time under the general principles announced by the president which are to care for our own needs, immediate and remote, to help the nations allied with us in the war and to supply, in so far as consistent with these two aims, the legitimate needs of neutrals.

Friction will no doubt arise from time to time in dealing with neutrals and especially with such as have commerce with the central powers. Prevention of any of our supplies becoming "available, either directly or indirectly, to feed the enemy" is of prime and fundamental importance. We cannot rely soley on official guarantees of neutrals as to that. Our consular agents in neutral countries, or perhaps the consular agents of our allies, must be given a right of supervision which would be intolerable to neutrals in normal times.

Making Flour of Potatoes.

From the Philadelphia Record

Potato drying is a comparatively new industry on this side; but dried potato flakes and potato flour are used extensively in Europe, where the flour is utilized in all kinds of bakery goods. The 1913 government report showed that imports of potato flour were 16,710,488 pounds. A plant situated in Arlington, Va., is to find a new location shortly at Rhinelander, Wis. Potato flakes can be turned almost instantly into mashed potatoes and would be especially welcome in mining camps and in the home of the busy housewife who can "bring them to a boil and serve." Unsalable potatoes and culls are now almost a total loss, and these may readily be converted into potato flour and products. The process of drying consists in steaming carefully cleaned potatoes, mashing them and drying the mashed potatoes on revolving steam cylinders.

Potato flakes make good food for farm stock Horses eat them readily, look better and work better on that diet.

How the Belligerents Line Up

Central Powers—Allies—Germany Austro-Hungarian Empire and Bulgaria four nations

Entente Powers and Their Allies—America, United States, France, Russia, Italy, Belgium, Serbia, Montenegro, Japan, San Marino, Portugal, Rumania, Cuba and Panama 14 nations

Have Severed Relations With Germany—China, Brazil, Bolivia, Guatemala, Liberia, Honduras, Nicaragua, San Domingo, Siam, nine nations.

How the Battle Lines Run

England—Holds the line from Lombartzyde to Dixmude to Bixschoote, Zonnebeke, Klein Zillebeke, Hollebeke, Messines, Ploegsteert (all in Belgium) to Armentiers, Fromelies, Neuve Chapelle, LaBassee, Loos, Lievin, around the outskirts of Lens, Acheville, Oppy, Fampoux, Monchy, Cherisy, Bullecourt, Lagnicourt, Hermies, Gouzeaucourt, Villiers-Guislain, Epehy, Le Verguier. One small portion in Belgium, is held by Belgium troops

France—From around St Quentin, to St Simon, to around LaFere, Fresnes, Coucy, Neuville, Laffaux, Jouy, along the Chemin des Dames to Craonne, Berry-au-Bac, Courcy, Cernay, north of Rheims, around Beine, Nauroy, Moronvilliers, Auberive, Souain, to the Argonne north of St Maneholdd, and Varenness, to Manualcourt, Vacherauville, Douaumont (north of Verdun), Damloup, Etain, Les Eparges, St Mihiel Dontamousson, through the Vosges to the Swiss border.

Macedonian Front.

Troops under General Serrail (France) and including units from the British French, Italian, Russian, Serbian and Greek armies hold a line approximately west to east from Ochrida to Gobech to Karlis (north of Monastir) to Zovik, to Doiran and Lake Doiran

Italian Front.

In the Trentino the lines have undergone no particular change in more than a year

On the Isonzo and Carso, General Cadorna's offensive this spring advanced the Italian line to approximately this course From the Isonzo east of Plava to Kuk Vodice, Monte Santo, Grazigna, Tivoli, Saber (east of Gorizia) to Versojba, San Grade, Volkovnjak, Fait, Hrib, Versic, east of Jamiani, Selo, close to Hermada, and down past Timave to the gulf The lines are within 12 miles of Trieste.

Russian Fronts.

No change has occurred for a year on the Riga-Mitau front. The lines of battle in Rumania and the wooded Carpathians have also not been moved by either side.

On July 1 Russia started a great offensive which gained 12 or 15 miles advance toward Lemberg, but this was all swept back by July 23. On this date the line ran approximately from east of Vila around Lida and Novogrudok to Stolowitshi, Ganzevitchi, Plaskino to Pinsk, then along the rivers Pripet and Strumen to south of the river Styr to Dubno and Brody In Galicia, they ran from Brody through Breezezany and Tarnopol, thence down into the Carpathians and Rumania.

Southern Fronts.

In Palestine British troops hold a line from Gaza nearly to the Dead sea, approximately 40 miles from Jaffa and Jerusalem, with only one gap around Beersheba.

In Mesopotamia, British troops have penetrated 60 miles beyond Bagdad nearly to Samarra and Khanikin. Further to the east is the Russian army, which has been quiescent since reported in the region of Kermanshah and Hamadan. One other Russian army which has not reported in months, was established near Ezerum and Erzanjan, Caucasia.

TWO TYPHOID LESSONS.

In April seven cases of typhoid fever were reported from one house in Brooklyn. The health department found that their were two families in this house, one on the first and one on the second floor On March 22 a child in the first floor family developed typhoid fever The diagnosis was made on the 26th On the 27th this child and two others who were developing typhoid were removed to the hospital. Nearly a week later the mother came down with the disease By this time the health department was aware of the necessity and they started vaccination against typhoid The remaining members of this family escaped.

Of the family upstair began with the [illegible] On April 11 one of the second floor children was reported as having typhoid Investigation showed that this child and two others had the disease. They were removed to the hospital. The remaining members of the upstairs family were then vaccinated, whereupon the disease stopped

The health department investigated to find out what these two families had used in common. It was possible to eliminate water The milk supply was [illegible] cause No other food was in the least possibilities. It was March and flies were not abroad Therefore, the two families did not have a common [illegible] It was found that a toilet in the basement was used jointly by the families The bed pans and commodes were taken to this toilet and [illegible] typhoid

There was an interval of one week between the time the first downstairs child fell sick and the making of the discovery During this time the unsterilized excretions were taken to the basement and there emptied. There was further evidence that the process of emptying resulted in a good deal of soiling The health department was convinced that the use in common of this toilet was the means of spreading typhoid

The first lesson is that vaccination stops typhoid A division of this lesson is that there are many people who think themselves safe enough who should be vaccinated against typhoid. The second is the more important. It is that where several families have a toilet as common ground—a place where the paths cross—the spread of contagion in these families is almost inevitable.

In every city where there are many tenement houses there is a high contagion rate. At one time it is typhoid at another, diphtheria at still another, scarlet fever It is well nigh impossible to stop contagion quickly, where the paths of several households cross at the toilet or privy War Has Made England Prosperous.

Business has been good in England despite the war B C Forbes says in the August American Magazine:

"The people as a whole, are earning more, spending more and saving more than ever before Wages were never so high nor work so plentiful. The rich who are not interested in favored manufactures are suffering through heavy taxation, but the working classes are prospering. The leading department store in London has had a record year.

"That is what comes from England.

"'Business conditions continue to indicate such industrial and commercial activity as the country has not hitherto experienced.'

"That is the message a great Canadian bank sends.

"'Is it time to get scared to death? I don't believe so at all I believe firmly that it is going to have an expansive effect on banking credits and bank deposits. I know we are going to see a vast industrial expansion. It isn't going to be 100 per cent employment, it is going to be 120 per cent employment. There will be need only for every man who worked before; there will be need for all the men and women. The unskilled worker will step into the place of the skilled worker, and women will be called upon to take a greater place in industry. It is going to mean the greatest wage fund that was ever paid out.'

"That is the verdict of Frank A. Vanderlip, head of America's largest national bank."

Didn't Mind That.

"Oh, will he bite?" exclaimed one of the sweetest girls with a look of alarm when she saw a dancing bear on the street the other day.

"No," said the escort, "he cannot bite; he is muzzled. But he can hug."

"Oh," she said with a distracting smile, "I don't mind that."

Much Too Big.

"Yes," said the Australian soldier, who was being shown round London; "you've got some fine places here. We ain't got nothing like them in Australia. That place, now," pointing to the hotel at Euston station, "that's a grand place! You do things on a much larger scale than we do."

"Really, I always thought things were ever so much bigger in Australia."

"Well! That there place, now—we'd think that ever so much too big in Australia."

"Yes; but you remember what a lot of people visit London through this station."

"Still, it's a bit big for its purpose."

"But surely you have hotels as big as that in Australia?"

"Hotel! D'you call that a hotel? My word, I thought it was the booking office!"

QUITS HIS JOB TO SERVE IN FRANCE

Lieut. Col. Charles E. Kutz.

Tommy Explains.

A couple of Charlestown kiddies were celebrating Bunker Hill Day by exploding a few torpedoes, according to the Boston Transcript. Said Nellie: "I don't see how the Germans can blow up a big ship with one of these things."

"Oh you girls can't expect to understand about such things," said Tommy, with a superior air. "Of course, the torpedoes they use are about a hundred times as big and they use a derrick to lift them up and drop them on the ship."

Lost in the Shuffle.

"I was just wondering."

"About what?"

"Wondering what had become of the patriotic notion I had last April that I'd spend my vacation this summer helping some farmer to hoe."

Pan.

They have a new game out at Fort Harrison called "pan," and played with an ordinary pie pan, says the Indianapolis News. Such a pan, when sailed correctly, has all the floating quality of an airplane, and with a little practice may be sailed fast and straight for a distance of 1,000 feet. "Elimination pan" is an improvement on the game, and is played by any number of men in a big circle, and each man that drops the pan is out of the game.

If It Should Happen.

"How did you avoid the draft?"

"Easy My wife was medical examiner on the exemption board."

Chicago street railways to seat all passengers would need 1,220 more cars.

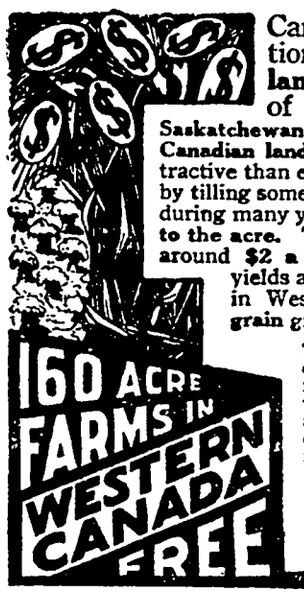
Raise High Priced Wheat on Fertile Canadian Soil



Canada extends to you a hearty invitation to settle on her FREE Homestead lands of 160 acres each or secure some of the low priced lands in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta. This year wheat is higher but Canadian land just as cheap, so the opportunity is more attractive than ever. Canada wants you to help feed the world by tilling some of her fertile soil—land similar to that which during many years has averaged 20 to 45 bushels of wheat to the acre. Think of the money you can make with wheat around $2 a bushel and land so easy to get. Wonderful yields also of Oats, Barley and Flax. Mixed farming in Western Canada is as profitable an industry as grain growing.

The Government this year is asking farmers to put increased acreage into grain. There is a great demand for farm labor to replace the many young men who have volunteered for service. The climate is healthful and agreeable, railway facilities excellent, good schools and churches convenient. MONEY LENDER PITIED POOR

Chinese Shylock in Manchuria Gave Annual Sum for Relief Work to Relieve His Conscience.

A wealthy Chinese money lender in Manchuria was recently convicted of making false declaration regarding robberies of his caravans by Mongolian bandits. His conscience troubled him to such an extent that he offered to contribute an annual sum of $750 for the relief of the poor, East and West says. This money was made the basis of a fund for feeding the helpless at Kungchuling.

Manchuria is terribly poor, despite the mineral and agricultural riches extracted from its soil and rocks, all of which products are shipped abroad. There are probably thousands of industrious natives unable, by unremitting toil, to earn more than a meager living. When to their natural difficulties are added the ravages of bandits and the evils of misgovernment, such as now prevail in many parts of China, abject poverty and starvation must be the lot of the people who, in the best of times, are only half fed.

Sister Alice (considerately)—Jackie, you can kneel in bed and I will cover your shoulders with the blankets while you say your prayers.

Jackie promptly springs into bed, and soon feeling quite comfortable, kneeling in supplication, he turns his head slightly toward his sister, with a whisper: "Alice, do you think this is fair?"—Los Angeles Times.

He Didn't Care.

A man pushed his way hurriedly into the subway at Brooklyn bridge in New York In his haste he collided with another man, who was not too hot to fight.

"Look where you're going," shouted the militant as he grabbed the other.

"I'm going to knock your block off."

"I should worry I was caught in the draft," said the other with an air of resignation.

The man who wanted to fight laughed, while everybody in the car joined in.

Greater Iowa Week

October 1 to 6 Inclusive

The Greater Iowa Association are announcing that Greater Iowa Week will be held October 1 to 6 inclusive. The Association is urging that the merchants thru-out the state should make a special showing of "made-in-Iowa" goods and products. Get in touch with the state manufacturers who produce your line of goods and make a special event of Iowa Week by putting these goods on display and advertising them as such for this week.

It is also urged by the Association that the ministers of Iowa will preach a Greater Iowa sermon on September 30, text may be secured by writing Greater Iowa Association, Davenport.

We will give full particulars of Iowa Week in later issues of the Times. It will be a state-wide event and so every town can boost for it. Why not start something in Klemme? Let's put on Iowa Week here and show them we are on the map.

"WHERE THE TRAILS MEET"

"Where the Trails Meet," a brand new western comedy-drama, by Addison Aulger, author of "In Arizona," etc., is conceded to be his best effort up to date. It is said there are but three kinds of stories, those of love, those of crime and those of money. "Where the Trails Meet" is a clever combination of the three. Though essentially a love story of the old west, told in a new way. It is not too sentimental, too obvious, too subtle, too coarse, too this or that; it is just right. It is a clean, springtime, apple blossom play; the kind where you can be young again; you can laugh a bit and sob a bit, and go home feeling as though you'd had a bath in Ponce de Leon's fountain of youth. Aulger Bros. will present "Where the Trails Meet" in their big tent, in Klemme, one night only, Wednesday, August 29th.

Don't forget the big Land Sale on Saturday afternoon.

Big Count Event

PLANS BEING LAID FOR COUNTY EVENT

We receive our information from good authority that a big County Event will take place at Garner on September the fifth to give the boys who have been drafted a great big send-off. It is being planned to have all the bands in the county at Garner on that date and the event will be a Patriotic County Day.

We owe it to our boys to lay aside one day for them. This will not be a gala day, for it is no time for rejoicing, but rather a patriotic day that will instill patriotism and a realization of the war we are going into.

We will keep you posted on further developments and give you full particulars as soon as plans are complete. Plan to lay aside your work for that day and attend this patriotic event. Everybody who can come, whether or not you have boys or friends in the draft, give the boys a good send-off and show them you are with them, it will mean a lot to them to see you there.

Clear Lake Man Falls From Balloon

NEARLY FATAL ACCIDENT AT CLEAR LAKE SUNDAY

Last Sunday evening at seven o'clock a large crowd gathered at Bayside Park, Clear Lake, to witness the balloon ascension by Harry Richards, a local Clear Lake man who has been making flights in northern Iowa for several years.

The ascension was to take place in a little clearing near the roller coaster. Richards had calculated that the wind would take him out across the lake and he would light in the water, so donned a life belt for this purpose. The wind changed somewhat and when Richards gave the order to cut loose, the balloon took the opposite course; his parachute struck a guy wire from a high pole used to support the balloon in filling. The force of the balloon was so great that when he struck the guy wire it snapped him around the wire and whirled him to the ground thirty or thirty-five feet below, breaking his leg and bruising him severely. The cork belt perhaps served to break his fall somewhat. He was immediately given medical attention and will recover.

Richards had a miraculous escape which might have resulted in his instantaneous death. It may have been lucky at that as it is very likely if he had of missed the guy wire that he would have crashed into the heavy timbers of the roller coaster as it was only about ten feet from the wire. It was a thrill that will be hard to forget and that few care to witness again

Flies breed so fast it is difficult to stamp them out. But, at least, we can keep them out of our houses.

And we ought to keep them out — not only for our comfort, but for our health. Many people don't realize what great disease-carriers flies are. They often come laden with disease germs directly to our food.

Screen the house and porches well and you prevent disease. Also you add to your comfort and peace of mind.

It does not cost much to screen a house. Let us screen your house.

A Modern Refrigerating System Keeps Our Meats in Excellent Condition

THE KLEMME TIMES

Ray A. Jorgenson, Pub.

KLEMME, IOWA

The damage done annually to underground pipes, cables and other metal structures in this country by electrolysis amounts to many millions of dollars. There are very few water, gas or lead cable systems that are not more or less subject at some points to electrolytic damage from stray currents. Moreover, the loss does not consist merely in the shortening of the life of such structures; electrolytic damage is one of the causes of the leakage of water and gas from distribution systems. The failure of such systems on account of electrolytic action may also involve various dangers to the life and health of human beings. According to the bureau of standards, more than 25 separate and distinct methods of dealing with the electrolysis problem have been proposed and experimented with from time to time. Some of these methods are useless, or even harmful. The bureau of standards has been studying the subject of electrolysis mitigation for the last six years, and has aided in installing complete mitigative systems in several cities. The bureau makes somewhat detailed tests in each of these places about once a year to make sure that the protective systems are being properly maintained. An extended series of experiments has recently been undertaken in the city of Springfield, Mass., with the so called three-wire system of electric railway operation, a system which offers considerable promise for the mitigation of electrolysis troubles under certain conditions frequently met with in cities.

The electric railroad running from Barcelona to Sarria, Spain, a distance of three miles, has recently been extended as far as Las Planas, about three and one-half miles farther. The new section starts from the station of Sarria, passes through a tunnel 653 feet in length, follows the mountain stream Pomaret, the course of which has been partially diverted, passes through a second tunnel 1,194 feet long and farther on through a third tunnel 564 feet At the exit of this tunnel an underground station has been built, beyond which the line passes through a fourth tunnel piercing the mountain of Vallvidrera. This tunnel one mile 175 feet long, is the most important work on the extension on account of the difficulties encountered in its construction The rolling stock of this Spanish line has been especially built to conform to the requirements of the local service and comprises electric motor cars and trailers. The cars were built by a Philadelphia company and are mounted on trucks provided with four motors of 125 horse power The passenger cars are closed and are 56 feet long designed for single and double-end operation The cars have a maximum speed of about 37 miles an hour Freight cars consisting of a platform mounted on two trucks with two compartments for the motorman are also in use both for transporting general merchandise as well as the company's construction material in continuing the line, which in due course will be extended to the interior towns of Tarrasa and Sabadell, and eventually farther

By a curious irony, the dahlia flower, popular at the flower shows, is of very humble origin It has been developed from the Mexican tubers. Some century and a half ago this plant was introduced into Europe by the Swedish botanist, Dr Dahl, for the purely commercial purposes of supplanting or supplementing the potato. But they did not prove popular and the dahlia dish soon disappeared from the dinner tables of Europe, but the gardeners saw the latent possibilities of the flower, from which they have evolved the double dahlia and other popular floral fancies. It would thus appear that the dahlia had reversed the fate of the red clover, which was originally introduced as a garden flower, but was found to be much more desirable as a fine forage. The tubers of the dahlia, though bitter, are still eaten in some parts of France.

Bernard's "Runaway" star, as the star of remarkably great proper motion recently discovered in Ophiuchus is called by some astronomers, is probably nearer to the solar system than any other fixed star whose parallax has been measured with the exception of Alpha Centauri. The parallax observations at the Allegheny observatory give a value of 5 second, while from micrometric measures made by Bernard, Russell obtains a value of 70 seconds. The parallax of Alpha Centauri is .76 seconds, corresponding to a distance of 4 3 light years. According to determinations made by F Gonnessiat, of France, from a comparison of photographs extending back to 1897, the new star is even newer than Alpha Centauri He finds its parallax to be approximately 1 second, representing a distance of only 3.26 light years.

The Germania, a famous racing yacht formerly owned by Lieut Krupp Von Bohlen and Halbach, of Germany, which was seized by the British government at Cowes at the beginning of the war has been sold for $50,000 to Captain Hannevig, of Norway The Germania twice won Emperor William's cup at Cowes. She cost $225 000 Captain Hannevig also purchased the racing cutter, Paula III, for $8,000 The Lasca II sold for $19 500 Both these yachts formerly were owned by Germans, but were seized at Cowes when the war began Insecurity is increasing in a disquieting manner in Germany, and particularly in the country regions. Thefts of all kinds of field produce and foodstuffs occur frequently The farm livestock in the meadows is no longer safe. Cattle, sheep and pigs are stolen, or slaughtered in the fields and the meat and hides carried off Bands of watchmen are everywhere being formed out of the older male members of the population left at home Members of such bands in turn go on guard, particularly at night and are equipped with arms.

Honors were awarded to several American students of the third year class at Oxford university with the announcement of the results of the final examinations. The list includes: W. C. Bosworth, Vermont, B. H. Branscomb, Alabama, C. R. Clason, Maine, A. G. Fite, Tennessee; P. F. Good, Nebraska, B. C. Holdsclaw, Georgia, B. M. Mow, Idaho; E. P. Werlein, Louisiana; E. P. Woodruff, Texas, H. E. Yntema, Michigan.

The first bomb dropping balloons were humble enough and equally futile. Balloons had been used in war as early as the siege of Maubeuge by the Austrians for observation purposes. The first talk of bomb dropping was in 1812, when the Russians were said to have had a huge balloon for that purpose; but nothing was done with it. In 1847, however, the Austrians, when attacking Venice, sent up paper fire balloons, which were to drop bombs into the town. But they forgot to allow for contrary air currents. The balloons got into such a current and, drifting back over the Austrian line, bombed them, instead of Venice.

HUGE WHEAT YIELDS IN PLYMOUTH COUNTY

One Farmer's Crop Nets Him Return of $105.50 Per Acre for 30 Acres.

LeMars, Ia., Aug. 18.—Even when taking into consideration the slightly greater cost of seed, land sowed in wheat this year is returning nearly double the net revenue that is being obtained from acreage devoted to oats or barey in Plymouth county. Throughout this section wheat is averaging better than 25 bushels to the acre, and many fields will run 35 bushels to the acre or better. An isolated instance, so far as has been reported here, is that on the farm of James Gardner, about 10 miles south of this city. For his 30-acre crop of wheat, marketed last Monday, Mr. Gardner received $3,165—an average of $105.50 an acre. There was an average yield of a fraction more than 42 bushels to the acre, and Mr. Gardner received a flat rate of $2.50 a bushel for his crop.

The heaviest yield of oats yet to come to the knowledge of local grain men was 96 bushels to the acre on a 12-acre tract owned by Herman Vessell, about 10 miles west of LeMars. If marketed on the day Mr Gardner sold his wheat, the oats would have brought 55 cents a bushel, or $55.80 for each acre of grain. There are some reports of barley running close to 50 bushels an acre. At the prevailing market price here, 50 bushels of barley are worth $55

FOOD PRICES IN DENMARK ARE LOWER THAN HERE

Buck Grove, Aug. 18.—In a letter received by Dr. A. F. Bonney, of Buck Grove, from Andrew Anderson, formerly a barber of this place, now residing in Viele, Denmark, the cost of living in Denmark is not as high as in the United States. Mr Anderson quotes the following prices

Flour, 7 cents per pound, sugar, 7 cents per pound, potatoes, $1.60 per hundred pounds, butter, 45 cents per pound, eggs, 25 cents per dozen, fresh fish 10 to 20 cents per pound, milk, 7 cents per quart, chickens, 20 to 25 cents per pound, beef 30 cents per pound, pork, 18 cents per pound, lard, 18 cents per pound, strawberries, 12 cents per pound.

He writes that Denmark is suffering for fuel kerosene, gasoline, corn and oil meal Crop prospects are good. He says the Danes hope to avoid entering the war, but will not be surprised if they have to fight at any time.

RIFLES AND SUPPLIES FOR SECOND REGIMENT SENT OUT

Webster City, Ia Aug 18 --The Second Iowa Supply company of this city commanded by Capt Harold J Smith today completed the shipment from here of a full carload of rifles and rifle parts to the various companies in the regiment Included in this arms shipment was also a large quantity of mess equipment consisting of cups, plates knives forks, etc With this distribution completed the Second regiment is now fully equipped so far as arms and mess equipment is concerned

A full car load of rifles, shipped from the United States arsenal at Rock Island and packed in 112 cases, reached Webster City last week Due to the voluntary censorship maintained by the press, however nothing was said of the presence of this ordinance in the city Ordinance Sergeant Meekins, with a detail from the supply company, unloaded it and it was temporarily stored in the old factory building of the Brown Skate company, where it was under a heavy guard night and day It was distributed among the companies of the regiment on requisition There were above 1,000 rifles in the shipment besides a large quantity of rifle parts The last case was shipped out today and the news now released for publication

IOWA CITY MAY YET FAIL TO GET COVETED ARMORY

Iowa City, Ia., Aug 18.—Hopes of building the new $125,000 armory provided for the Iowa State university in the appropriations of the last legislature are about given up for the near future unless assistance from some unexpected source is obtained The armory, as originally planned, was to have been one of three of the largest and costliest in the United States.

The plan was for a building 300 by 400 feet, the main hall to be arched with steel arches supporting the roof At the time the appropriation was made the price of structural steel was less than $90 per ton It is now very hard to obtain at about $165. The amount of steel required is so great that the entire appropriation probably would not much more than pay for the steel at prevailing prices.

A high university authority said that unless steel could be bought for $100 per ton the building would be out of the question

WANTS ALLIES' CANNON TO ANSWER POPE'S PLEA

Rome Aug 18 -"The pope's peace proposals are true restoration in the sense of Lloyd-George's latest speech and constitute a peace as outlined by President Wilson, while they also correspond to peace without annexation or indemnities supported in other quarters," says the Gorriere D'Italia, the semi-official organ of the vatican.

"Is it possible that the central powers will consent to make peace, imposing upon them such sacrifices and obliging them to pronounce as Lloyd-George the word 'restoration'? asks the Corriere D'Italia.

The Giornale De Italia expressed the hope that the voice of the pope urging peace will be accompanied by the sound of the cannon of the allies from Flanders to the Gulf of Triest attacking the enemy with renewed ardor.

Springfield, Ill., Aug. 18.—Declaring that the supreme test for America ... come, Governor Lowden today denounced "war profiteering by those who ... "growing drunk on profits," and declared that the country must be put first or the nation would fail in the present struggle.

The governor made no reference to the coal situation in Illinois, although it was believed to have been provoked by the failure of coal operators to ... operate with Chief Justice Carter, ... director for Illinois, in fixing coal prices as agreed to by the operators in Chicago. Coal prices have been brushed by the state council of defense as "indefensible."

Chicago, Aug. 18.- Public hearing preliminary to plans for fixing the price of coal opened today before Judge Carter, who has been appointed director of coal for Illinois by Governor Lowden.

Arguments have been prepared for submission by mine owners, retail officials of miners' unions and railroad representatives The hearing is expected to continue for several days.

Federal investigators have been working on the books of Illinois mine owners and it was reported that many mines have been checked

No settlement of the labor trouble has yet been effected

The hearing was opened with the assumption that little help could be expected from the coal operators, who have not appointed a committee to confer with Judge Carter

Notice of nonparticipation in the hearing was sent by the coal operators who, through counsel, presented a brief to Judge Carter reviewing the coal situation and asserting they had agreed to cooperate with the state council and the coal director.

The operators' report asserted that a maximum price for coal had been tentatively agreed to with the federal trade commission, definite prices to be determined by the federal investigation now in progress.

The report characterized Governor Lowden as having precipitately announced that the operators had agreed to the appointment of a state coal controller when the acton was by coal operators as individuals and not as a body.

CIVIL WAR PRICES PASSED BY MEA...

Dealers and Others Say Cost of Beef, Ham, Bacon and Pork Loin Is Going Higher.

Chicago, Aug. 18.—Civil war prices on meat are being out done today. The high price of beef exceeds that of the civil war in history. The same with pork, ham, bacon and lamb, according to Chicago retailers.

The relief from the steady rise in prices on meat depends on the lower prices of grain prices which is in the hands of Herbert Hoover, the packers say. The grain has received abundant rains, but the cattle raisers are holding back the supply for higher prices. The answer that must be given to the constantly propounded inquiry "When will prices go higher?" is "They will."

Death Traps on German Liners.

Think of a great deserted ship, 545 feet long, 70 feet wide and over 50 feet deep—as black and forbidding as a Siberian copper mine, with not a ray of light from the uppermost deckhouse to the caverns of the lowest holes, in the damp and slimy bilges, or in the rooms filled with engines, pumps, dynamos, pipes and valves without number.

Think of exploring it, single handed, with the warning fresh in your ears that it is full of pitfalls, bombs and death traps, that every door you touch will set off an explosive which will blow you into eternity, that every ladder you step on will send you sprawling down a bottomless chasm, and that, if you value your life, you must not touch a thing—wood, metal, or cloth—without first investigating it.

How would you like to explore such a ship with only a flashlight to guide you through the abysmal blackness and with no means of communicating with friends on the top deck once you start on your perilous journey? This was the task assigned to a certain engineer in New York shortly after the government seized the interned German ships in this country, says the Popular Science Monthly. It was a task fraught with the greatest danger, requiring an extraordinary degree of caution and patience, and calling for a rare display of courage. But so fearless was this young engineer and so successful was he in his undertaking that 36 hours after the ship in question reached the navy yard, the main boilers were generating steam.

Among the many interesting things revealed by the intrepid investigator were the location of missing parts of the main engines, carefully hidden away in the coal bunkers; the discovery of bolts and nuts which led to a minute examination of the cylinders and steam chests, where it was disclosed that parts had been removed and other parts carefully substituted to conceal the omission; the location, in other places, of studs and bolts partly sawed through, with the saw slot filled up; the finding of steel fitted into steamports, so that any attempt to turn over the engine would have ruined it; the discovery of obstructions in pipes, smokestacks and ventilators—lumps of coal and bars of iron placed on top of the closed damper valve in a ventilator, requiring only a pull on the damper chain to precipitate the entire load down on the head of the person foolish enough to pull it, and other traps too numerous to mention here.

A Way to Do Your Bit.

From the Toledo Blade.

The department of labor is promoting an organization of men past the military age "to meet emergencies in employment conditions with the government or industries and business on which the success of the war depends." Thus, if there occurs a dearth of labor in a shipyard, in a tent making factory, in the harvest field, or in any plant working on war orders, members of this organization can be drawn upon to meet the emergency. The need of such an association, society, club or whatever it is to be called, will be almost imperative when the army draws its hundred thousands from industry and business. Secretary Wilson does well to anticipate that need. It is one more way by which the resources of the country can be marshaled for carrying forward the war.

The Belgian government has received information to the effect that deported Belgians working in the Thyssen works at Mulheim on Ruhr, declared that as the Germans had violated their promise to send them back home at the end of four months, they would prefer to die rather than to continue. The Germans imposed a fine of 30 marks each and imprisonment for 10 days upon the men.

At a recently test of an aeroplane engine mounted on an automobile body the propellers developed power sufficient to drive the car at a speed of 40 miles an hour.

WILSON WANTS UNMARRIED MEN SELECTED FIRST

Letter to Senator Weeks Makes Known Executive's Stand on Question of Draft.

DATES FOR CALL CHANGED

Last 10 Per Cent of Men Will Report About November 1, Under New Plan—Slackers Are Not Spared.

Washington, Aug. 18.—Provost Marshal General Crowder has again changed the date for the entraining of the first drafted army. Thirty per cent will leave September 5, 30 per cent September 19, and 30 per cent October 3. The last 10 per cent will leave the latter part of October.

President Wilson is sending a message to Senator Weeks in regard to the question of married men being taken in the selective draft. There is great disapproval and objection to the clause that makes them liable to be taken. The president believes that the married men with families should not be drafted unless they married to escape the draft. It would be an economically unsound policy and unwise for the successful prosecution of the war, he holds.

As long as there are enough single men these should be taken. Besides, if the married men were drafted there would be the added burden of their families to provide for, he points out.

MISS RANKIN STARTS HOT FIGHT IN BUTTE

First Congresswoman, Candidate for Senate, Angers Women by Presence.

Butte, Mont., Aug. 18.—Montana politics are undergoing a spicy airing at the hands of the women. They are attacking Miss Jeannette Rankin, member of congress, claiming that she came there in the interests of the socialist party to annex votes only. She is a candidate for the Senate.

Figurative hair pulling has resulted from the charge that she came uninvited to inspect the labor troubles there, with a view of helping the disturbers.

GERMAN SUB LOSS REPORTS EXAGGERATED

Allied Conference Declares Them 40 Per Cent Above Damage Inflicted.

Paris, Aug. 18.—The German official report of merchant shipping sunk by submarines is exaggerated 40 per cent, according to the result of the conference of admirals of allied navies, which was held at Paris, July 25.

REGULAR ARMY DRAWS 1,000 RECRUITS A DAY

Washington, D. C., Aug. 18.—War volunteers for the regular army have reached a total of 190,347 men, bringing the roll to 7,000 in excess of the authorized war strength.

Since the total quota for the expanded army was filed several days ago recruits have continued to enlist at an average of more than 1,000 men a day. They will be needed and the recruiting service will not relax its efforts.

There still are 25 states that have not supplied their quotas, but some of the other states has furnshed their quota several times over.

California with a quota of 4,754, has furnished 7,186 men; Nevada with a quota of 162 men, has furnshed 936. Wyoming with a quota of 290 has furnished 649.

WILSON WILL DISCUSS POPE'S PEACE PROPOSALS

Washington, Aug. 17.—President Wilson and Secretary Lansing soon will begin a series of important conferences, preliminary to the response to be made to Pope Benedict's peace message. Before the communication goes forward the views of the entente governments on the subject will be ascertained.

In official and diplomatic circles here today Premier Lloyd-George's speech was regarded as voicing the views of the allies as to any discussion of peace. His accounting of food supplies and the shipping situation as affected by the submarine warfare was also regarded is indicative of Great Britain's safe position and strong attitude.

GUY LA FOLLETTE, FORMER TRIBUNE REPORTER, MAJOR

Indianola, Ia., Aug. 18.—Guy E. La Follette, a former Sioux City newspaper man, has been appointed major in the quartermaster's department of the Montana national guard, according to a letter received by friends here. La Follette is a nephew of United States Senator La Follette and for several years was a reporter on the Sioux City Tribune. Prior to that he was employed on Des Moines newspapers. For the last four years he has been managing editor of the Helena, Mont., Independent.

BENTON NOT ARRESTED.

East St. Louis, Ill., Aug. 17.—In the story of arrests here yesterday in connection with the East St. Louis riots, the name of Thomas Benton was sent out erroneously. The name should have been Thomas Boston, democratic politician and former candidate for sheriff. He is charged with assault to kill.

No fair grounds in North Iowa has better facilities for taking care of your stock. Two mammoth, new barns, electrically lighted, free hay, bedding, water. Last year we had an excellent exhibit of live stock. We can make it still better this year if you will do your bit. The Agricultural Hall too must be well filled. Do Your Bit.

LARGE AMPHITHEATRE

One of the largest and most comfortable amphitheatres in this part of Iowa is ready to hold you. It is the best place from which to view the races, special free attractions, and the grand display of fire works at the night fair. You will enjoy a comfortable seat, up out of the dust and protected from the elements.

PAVILLION DANCE

Each night during the fair the pavillion dance will operate, the same as the past two years. A good orchestra will furnish the music. The pavillion is far enough away from other amusements so that there will be no confusion of music. One of the popular amusements of the night fair. If you like to dance you'll surely be pleased with the pavillion dance.

No Person Can Afford to Go Without a Vacation

It's false economy to begin saving at the cost of health.

When it comes to a vacation, the best is none too good—

—and the best doesn't mean the most expensive,

—Colorado for example.

Go where you can get the most diversion and nerve rest,

—ask any physician if that advice isn't sound,

—and Colorado admittedly offers far more diversion than any other vacation land in America,

—plus the most wonderful scenery and the widest variety of sports in the world,

—plus the far-famed, invigorating, nerve-resting Colorado air.

World's Thickest Tree.

It is said the largest tree known, in thickness, is a partly-decayed chestnut in Sicily, which is 60 feet across. Mexican cypress and the oriental plane have reached 40 feet. This puts the California big tree and the baobab in the background, but the big tree is of greater bulk in combined height and girth and the baobab is thickest in relation to height.

CHAPTER EIGTH—(Continued).

Lepine recognized the cogency of this reasoning and nodded.

"Continue," he said.

"She was a dark, slim girl, of about 20. They gave me no trouble. She scarcely left the house except for the marketing. But her father was away a great deal."

"Did he bring much baggage?"

"Two pieces of hand baggage, sir, and that box yonder by the window. The box was very heavy—almost as if filled with iron—and he had great difficulty in getting it up the stairs, even with the assistance of the truckman."

"Did you enter this room while he was here?"

"No, sir; I entered neither of the rooms. My rule is never to interfere in the affairs of my tenants—they do not like it. But on one occasion, as I passed the door, I hard him at work on his invention."

"Heard him, you say?"

"Yes, sir, there was a deep humming noise as of a huge top, or perhaps a motor. It occurred to me that it was a flying machine which he was inventing. Then, on Sunday, came a telegram."

"A telegram?"

"Yes sir; I brought it up myself. He read it and his face grew very grave. He informed me that he would be compelled to depart next day—that his sister was dying. But he assured me that he would return as soon as possible to continue his experiments, and that I was to hold the apartment for him—at least until the month for which he had paid had expired."

"And he did depart?"

"Yes, sir, quite early in the morning. I called a cab, and assisted to carry down his baggage. The box, as you see, remains against his return also his apparatus," and he indicated the batteries.

"Oh certainly," agreed Lepine, with irony, "there can be no doubt of his intention to return. And then his face grew dark and his eyes flashed. How does it happen," he demanded sternly, "that you did not cause him to fill out a registration blank for the police?"

The little man twisted his hands nervously.

"In that I admit I was most culpable, sir," he said. "But when I looked in my desk for a blank, I found that I had none. Every day I intended going to the prefecture to get a new supply, but every day something occurred to prevent me. And then came the day of his departure."

Lepine's face was very stern.

"You have, indeed, been culpable," he said, "and I shall see that you are punished. You have broken one of the laws of your country. You have aided a malefactor!"

The little man's face was livid.

"Oh, do not say so, sir!" he protested. "There must be some mistake! That kind gentleman, absorbed only in his invention—"

"I do say so," broke in Lepine, savagely. "Did he receive any letters?"

"One, sir, on the Saturday before the arrival of the telegram. No doubt it, too, spoke of the illness of his sister."

Lepine put his hand wearily to his head.

"At least you noticed the address on the letter?" he asked.

"Oh, yes, sir. It was 'Monsieur B. Seguin, 80 Rue du Plasson, Toulon.' Seguin, that was the name of my lodger."

"But you said he was not a Frenchman!"

"Perhaps he was a Belgian, sir. I have heard that they are sometimes dark."

Lepine threw up his hand.

"Head of a pig!" he cried, and then controlled himself. "M. Pigot," he said, "you will take this idiot to his rooms and remain in charge of him until you hear from me."

And then, as Pigot and his prisoner started down the stairs, Lepine turned to an investigation of the two rooms. Every nook, every crevice, ever inch of the floor, every drawer—all these he examined with a minuteness of which only the French police are capable, but his search disclosed nothing which shed any light on the mystery. At last, he descended the stairs and left the house.

There was still one hope, the telegram. He hastened to the post office, inquired for the clerk of telegraphs, apologized for again disturbing him, and asked to see the telegram received for B. Seguin, 80 Rue du Plasson, the Sunday before. At the end of five minutes it was in his hands, and he read it with dismay. It had been sent from Brussels, and this is the English of its contents:

Our sister is very ill and asks for you. Come if you would see her alive.
Charles Seguin.

CHAPTER IX.

CHECKMATE.

"It is evident that this affair was not lightly arranged," said M. Delcasse, and ran his fingers nervously through his hair.

Lepine nodded gloomily.

"You may well say so!" he agreed.

The two sat together in Delcasse's room, and Lepine had just finished his report. Evening was falling, and the room was growing dark, but neither desired a light.

"Everything has been thought of and provided for," said the Prefect, at last, "even to the telegram which gave an excuse for this man's abrupt departure. Perhaps the other telegrams were also intended to mislead us—just as they did mislead me—to convince us that those other men were only ordinary travelers. They must have foreseen that the police would investigate the presence of every stranger in Toulon. It was careless to send both telegrams from Brussels, but a coincidence so small might easily be overlooked. On one point only was there an oversight—they did not foresee that we might trace them by means of the money. There is our hope. Sooner or later, the man with the white hair will spend another of his 100 franc notes. There is a certain justice in it," he added, "that he should be betrayed by his blood money."

"Yes, blood money!" cried Delcasse. "That is the word for it! Oh, that I had my hands on the monster—for he is a monster, Lepine, he must be a monster! There he sat, in cold blood, and loosed the power that killed 300 men! Have you considered, Lepine, that the finding of this second installation furnishes, as Crochard foresaw, proof of his theory?"

"Yes," said Lepine, in a low voice, "this is the proof."

Delcasse was on his feet, striding savagely up and down the room.

"But it is absurd," he cried, "it is incredible that here, under our very noses, such things should take place! What are our police for, Lepine—our secret service?"

"It is the fault of that miserable landlord," Lepine pointed out.

"Of him an example shall be made. But that does not help us. This man must not escape! Think what it may mean for France if he escapes!"

"I have thought, sir!" and Lepine's voice was trembling.

Delcasse turned on him fiercely.

"Where is Crochard?" he demanded. "What is he doing all this time?"

"I do not know, sir. I have not seen him since yesterday."

"Rest assured that he has not been idle. Do you know where to find him?"

"I have his address."

"Go to him, then, and say I wish to see him. We must lay these discoveries before him—though no doubt he has already made them for himself. Tell him he must not desert us—that without him, we are lost!"

Lepine was grateful for the darkness, for his cheeks were red with humiliation. But, after all, M. Delcasse was right. He rose with a sigh.

"I will seek him at once, sir," he said.

"Understand well, Lepine," said the minister, more gently, "it is not you I blame. You have done all that is possible with the means at your command. But we cannot afford to fail. In an affair of this kind, the public is not reasonable. Should we fail, and should our failure become known, as it almost surely would, the ministry might find itself swept away before the storm. So we must find Crochard."

"I agree with you, sir," said Lepine, and took his leave.

The Cafe des Voyageurs was crowded when he reached it, and he had some difficulty in finding a seat. The marines who had been searching the wreck had, at last, been released from duty, and had, with one accord hastened ashore to refresh themselves at the expense of a populace eager to listen to every detail. The cafe hummed with talk; weird and revolting stories of the search were told with gusto; the completeness of the destruction was described; the survivors dwelt upon their sensations at the moment of the explosion; the heroism of the rescuers was not forgotten; but, and Lepine noted this with a little sigh of relief, nowhere was there an intimation that the disaster was other than an accident.

He sat there for half an hour, listening to all this, and, then, as Crochard made no sign, he summoned the head waiter and requested a word with the proprietor. With a nod, as of one who expected the request, the man turned and again led the way to the door at the rear of the room.

"In there, sir," he said, and closed it when Lepine had entered.

A single candle burned on the table in the center of the little room, and beyond it sat a man. At the first glance, in the semidarkness, Lepine fancied it was Crochard; then he saw that this man was slighter, that his face was bloodless, and that he was staring with hunted eyes.

With a little start of surprise, he looked again; then he sat down.

"So, Samson, it is you!" said Lepine, quietly.

"Yes, sir," answered Samson. "I was expecting you. But I did not think you would recognize me so readily."

Lepine laughel shortly.

"I have a good memory," he said. "Crochard told you, perhaps, that I might come?"

"Yes, sir; and he directed that I give you this."

He handed Lepine a note. The latter broke the seal, held it to the light and read it carefully:

"My Dear M. Lepine—I have found it necessary to leave Toulon, in the pursuit of a certain business, whose nature you can guess. I hope soon to have good news for M. Delcasse and yourself. Meanwhile, I would remind you of our agreement as to my friends. Samson is one of them. He has already been of some service in this affair, and may be of more. We can discuss his future upon my return. I will answer for him.

"Crochard, L'Invincible!"

Lepine refolded the note and slipped it into his pocket.

"When did Crochard leave," he asked.

"He gave me the note at 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon, sir, and stated that he was about to depart. I have not seen him since."

"Did he mention his destination?"

"No, sir."

Lepine regarded his companion thoughtfully.

"There is one thing that perhaps you can tell me, Samson," he said. "Previous to his departure, did he visit the house at 80 Rue du Plasson?"

"I think it very probable," answered Samson, after a moment's hesitation. "I myself furnished M. Crochard with that address, when he returned to the cafe yesterday for his lunch."

"Ah!" said Lepine. "So it was you discovered it!"

He fell a moment silent, studying the other's countenance.

"You have indeed changed, Samson," he said, at last. "I suppose it was Crochard who arranged your escape?"

Samson made no reply.

"You have a good business here?"

"Very good, sir."

"You know, of course, that it is my duty to denounce you as an escaped criminal?"

"Yes, I know that, sir."

"Crochard tells me that he will answer for you—in other words, he guarantees that you will not run away. Do you understand that?"

"Do not fear," said Samson, huskily. "Monsieur will always find me here when he requires me."

Lepine looked at him for a moment, then got abruptly to his feet.

"Very well," he said; "I shall do nothing for the present," and he left the cafe.

It was nearly 8 o'clock, and, feeling the need of dinner, Lepine made his way back to his hotel, but his hunger was destined to go unsatisfied, for, as he stepped through the door, Pigot touched him on the arm.

"M. Delcasse wishes to see you at once," he said, and Lepine, with one regretful glance in the direction of the dining room, hurried up the stairs to the minister's apartment. He found him dictating to his secretary, a great pile of letters before him.

Without pausing in his dictation, Delcasse picked up a telegram which lay at his elbow, and handed it to Lepine. It was dated from Paris, and had been filed but an hour before. It read:

"Seven notes 100 francs B162810R to B162816R deposited today by Thomas Cook & Son.

"Linne, Governor Bank of France."

Lepine laid the telegram on his desk and glanced at his watch.

"I must be in Paris in the morning," he said.

Delcasse nodded.

"Yes," he agreed. "And Crochard?"

"Is no doubt already there," and he handed Delcasse the note which Samson had given him.

Delcasse read it, and looked up with an amused smile, in which there lurked a trace of malice.

"What a man!" he said. "Nevertheless, Lepine, I think you would better go. You may be able to assist him! Give him my compliments, and keep me informed," and he turned back to his secretary.

The Paris office of the Messrs. Cook is at the corner opposite the opera house, and here, about 10 o'clock on the morning of Thursday, September 28, a little grey bearded man descended from a fiacre, entered, and, after a short delay, was admitted to the presence of the manager, who made it clear at once that he was entirely at the service of his distinguished visitor.

Lepine sat down and produced from his pocket seven notes of the Bank of France, for 100 francs each. They were quite new and had not even been folded.

"These notes were deposited by you yesterday afternoon," he said. "I should like to know from whom they were received."

The manager took the notes and glanced at them.

"That will not be difficult, sir," he said. "Our cashier can no doubt tell us from which of our clerks he received them. Excuse me a moment."

He hurried from the room with the notes in his hand, and Lepine, strolling to the window, relapsed into his favorite amusement. At no other corner in the city could it be practiced so profitably, for here, at the meeting of the boulevards all Paris, sooner or later, passed; and not Paris only, but vagrants from every nation. So Lepine watched the crowd intently, his bright eyes skipping from face to face—a mere glance at one, a longer glance at another, a close stare at a third. Perhaps, at the back of his mind, there was the hope that some incredible good fortune might send past this corner a shrunken, white haired man, leaning on the arm of his dark haired daughter. . . .

The opening of the door behind him broke into his thoughts, and he turned to find that the manager had brought another man back with him.

"This is the clerk who received the money," said the manager, and returned the seven notes to the detective.

Lepine motioned the clerk to be seated, and himself sat down facing him.

"Tell me all that you remember of the transaction," he said.

"It was Tuesday afternoon, sir," the clerk began, "about 4 o'clock, I should say, that a man came to the counter and stated that he desired a stateroom, with two berths, second class, for the Prinzsessin Ottilie, the sailing of yesterday."

"What sort of a man?" asked Lepine.

"A thin man, past middle age. His hair was quite grey and he was of a dark complexion, with very bright eyes."

"What language did he use?"

"He spoke in English, sir."

"Fluently?"

"Quite fluently, sir."

"Very well; proceed."

"I was in some doubt as to whether such a stateroom was available, as this is the busy season; but on reference to our list, I found that there was such a stateroom. A customer to whom we had sold it had just called at the office, saying that he would not be able to sail, and leaving his tickets with us to resell, if possible. When I told the man of this, he seemed very pleased, took the tickets, and gave me the 700 franc notes. My attention was called to them because they were quite new and unfolded. He took them from a long envelope which he carried in an inner pocket, and which seemed to contain a large sum of money."

HUGE ARMY SUPPLIES SOLDIERS IN TRENCHES

Vast Store of Food and Munitions Moved During Night.

Behind the British Lines in France, (by mail.)—What makes an indelible impression on the newcomer to the battle front is the tremendous organization back of the actual fighting line, the miles of roadways flotted with transport of war food for men and horses, shells for the guns, ammunition for rifles and machine guns and comforts for the wounded.

The final and most interesting link in this vast organization is the operation of getting the food right up to the men in the trenches. It usually takes place under cover of darkness when the enemy is unable to impede its progress as efficiently as with the aid of daylight. Night after night this goes on. After one recovers from surprise at the quietness with which it is done he is bound to marvel at the clock like precision of the whole operation—all of which testifies to the efficient organization necessary in a war like this.

The first intimation that the transport is preparing to move out toward the front line is a clattering of horses' shoes on the cobbles of a French farmyard. Then voices call out orders, water carts are filled; horses are harnessed to the wagons and a few minutes later the whole column is standing ready, silent, the transport men mounted, the quartermaster, transport officer and a sergeant on foot. In another instant a whistle sounds, there is a cracking of whip, then another clatter on the cobblestones and the rumble of heavily laden wagons as the whole column moves out toward the trenches.

A few miles ahead the first star shells shoot up and little sudden pricks of flame come from the enemy's guns; then there is soft burst of shrapnel followed by the deep boom of the heavy guns.

The roar is narrow but wide enough for the limbers of other regiments, cookers, ambulances, army service corps lorries laden with tools and trench stores, orderlies on bicycles and wounded men to pass on their way further back of the lines. But not a word is heard as the two columns pass each other along this road.

As the column "going in" with the rations moves up closer to the lines the star shells and boom of the big guns becomes more distinct. Suddenly the column halts—shells have burst in the road or on either side of it a little way ahead. When this ceases probably for only a few minutes the word is given to move on again. The column continues to crawl along until it reaches a battered old building beside the road and within a stone's throw of the support trenches. Here are left the supplies brought up by this column.

The next sight is a stream of men with picks and shovels and ammunition a sergeant to see that the rations for the different companies are placed in different piles; a post corporal hurrying hither and thither in search of D company's letters, which have been mislaid, and the transport officer and quartermaster supervising and controlling everything—always in the most impenetrable darkness, save when a star shell lights up the white faces, the sweating horses and the roads.

The transport officer gives the word, and the empty wagons jolt out onto the road again to join in the stream that flows back towards billets and sleep.

Saving Grain For Seed.

From the Lincoln Nebraska Star.

There have been hysterical fads sprung in the way of food propaganda in connection with the war. So many that it has been often difficult to discover which were the good and which the foolish expedients proposed.

But we have in this state one that is no fad. It is a genuinely rational proposition that the council of defense is urging, that Nebraska wheat shall be conserved for seed for next year's crop. It requires small elucidation to make the wisdom of this course manifest to practical men.

With careful detail and intelligent pains this splendid plan to assure Nebraska farmers a seed supply for 1918 is being worked out and brought to attention of all directly concerned in wheat culture, and its vast importance to all the state is being readily understood.

This experience resulting from our part in the war seems destined to prove of lasting benefit to the agriculture of the state. Hereafter whenever a crop of any particular kind of grain is short there is going to be somebody alive to the necessity of saving enough of it for the following year's seeding. And it will be done benevolently by cooperation instead of by speculators looking for exhorbitant profits.

A Pacifist's Income Revealed.

From the London Globe.

Paris—The Journal des Debats, in a leading article referring to the scene in the chamber of deputies the other day, when the premier, M. Ribot, denounced a Paris daily newspaper, says:

"The worst kind of pacifist propaganda is that crafty, perfidious and hidden kind which is not formulated in an article or tract, but which manifests itself in the presentation of facts in such a way as to demoralize the spirit and weaken the heart. It is a campaign of this nature to which reference was made in the chamber by M. Ribot, regarding the newspaper in question—the Bonnet Rouge—for everybody names it openly. Its tendencies are known to everybody. But people have been asking: Where did it get its money from? People made a good guess, and now we know. The revealing check was seized at the frontier, and was made payable to a person whom many suspected. The rest of the story will be told when the trial comes on."

Example Worthy of Imitation.

From the Baltimore News.

Abigail Adams, one of that stern, loyal, helpful type of matrons who did almost as much as their husband and fathers to win the revolutionary war, writing from Braintree, Mass., September 29, 1776, to her husband, John Adams, busily engaged at Philadelphia, said:

Forty men are now drafted from this town. More than one-half, from 16 to 50, are now in the service. . . . I hardly think you can be sensible how much we are thinned in this province.

If it is necessary to make any more drafts upon us, the women must reap the harvests. I am willing to do my part. I believe I could gather corn and husk it, but I should make a poor figure at digging potatoes.

Half the men between the ages of 16 and 50 taken by the draft! We are discussing the hardship of a draft that calls only for men who have no dependents, who are between the ages of 21 and 31 and for but 7,000 of those out of a total enrollment of more than 100,000.

Abigail Adams, ready to shuck corn as an example to the women of this day well worth emulation. A woman who later took her place at the Court of St. James and who knew how to bear herself even under the merciless snubs received there, who became mistress of the White House and first lady of the land was neither afraid nor ashamed to do any work the welfare of her country demanded.

John Adams speculated in his correspondence if future generations would understand and be worthy of the privations that they might be free. This generation has yet to meet the test.

Cause Enough.

One-Sided Recognition.

They passed on the street without speaking, but their eyes had met in recognition and challenge. She, accompanied by a female friend, he had a male companion. When he had passed the girl said:

"That was poor Jack Jurgens. You didn't speak, but you noticed his cut, didn't you? Poor boy it hurts me to think how he has never got over the refusal to marry him. Of course, it was all broken up at the time, but I thought he would soon get over it. He's thinner, isn't he? I do hope he hasn't plunged into dissipation. He couldn't trust himself to speak to me, he? Oh, dear!"

And the man was saying:

"Did you see how that dame looked me the eye? I suppose I should have spoken to her, because I can't help thinking I've met her somewhere. Her face is familiar but I can't place her."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Two young Irishmen in a Canadian regiment were going into the firing line for the first time, and their colonel promised them five shillings each for every German they killed.

Pat lay down to rest while Mick performed the duty of watching. Pat had not lain long when he was awakened by Mick shouting:

"They're comin'! They're comin'!"

"Who's comin'?" shouts Pat.

"The Germans," replies Mick.

"How many are there?"

"About fifty thousand."

"Begorra," shouts Pat, jumping up and grabbing his rifle, "our fortune's made!"—London Opinion.

GIRL OF 14 SOLDIER'S WIFE

While Her Husband Fights in France Young Bride Will Go to School in This Country.

A fourteen-year-old schoolgirl became a soldier's wife in Brooklyn recently, thus following the example of her mother, who became the bride of one of Uncle Sam's men in khaki 14 months ago.

Mattie Lee Hudsbeth of Douglas, Ariz., was the latest bride, says the Brooklyn Eagle. The soldier boy who became her husband is David Eugene Henry of Spring, Tex. The bridegroom is only twenty-two, and a member of the Twenty-second infantry, now stationed at Fort Hamilton.

The girl's stepfather went abroad with General Pershing and is now "somewhere in France." His wife planned to join him and came East. While waiting passoprts here her daughter met Henry, with whom she became acquainted in Arizona two years ago.

While the bride's mother is absent in France her daughter will remain here and will attend school.

Some young men would get along better if they had less paint to their shoes and a little more to their conversation.

This is the best time of the year to visit the East. You will find every sort of recreation amid ideal conditions to make your vacation one long to be remembered.

Knew Father's Weakness.

Johnny B- --, who has seen eight summers go by, not very long ago developed a fondness for playing "hookey" from school. After two or three offenses of this kind he was taken to task by his teacher.

"Johnny," she said, "the next time you are absent I want you to bring me an excuse from your father telling me why you were not here."

"I don't want to bring any excuse from father," protested the boy.

"Why not?" asked the teacher, her suspicion plain.

"'Cause father isn't any good at making excuses. Mother finds him out every time.—Rehoboth Sunday Herald.

A Mean Advantage.

The "canniness" of the Scottish people is aptly illustrated in the following:

The other days two boys of about twelve years of age quarreled and finished up with blows. In the tussle one of the combatants got knocked down, and while still on the ground he queried:

"Wud ye hit a chap when he's doon?"

"Na," gallantly responded the victor.

"Ah, weel," quoth the vanquished yet cautious youngster, "I'll be here till ye gang awa'."—Tit Bits.

Doris' Idea.

Doris' father raised chickens and Doris understood all about setting hens. One day she was taken to see the new litter of puppies. They were curly black balls cuddled down beside a smooth tan mother.

"Are those really Emmy Lou's puppies?" Doris asked.

"Yes, dear," she was told.

"Well, then," she remarked in a disgusted tone, "she couldn't have sat on her own eggs."

No Chance.

"Yes, sir; one hour's uninterrupted reading each evening would make you—"

"Uninterrupted! Where do you think my wife spends her evenings?"

SIMS AND BEATTY HEAD FORMIDABLE SEA FORCE

If personalities count for anything there will be optimism in the cooperation of American and British naval forces now in the North sea. Rear Admiral William Sowden Sims is in command of the American flotilla of destroyers in the submarine zone. He is working under the supervision of Admiral Sir David Beatty in command of the British grand fleet. The two have much in common.

Admiral Sims was naval aide to President Roosevelt, and therefore has preceded his former distinguished chief in this mission to share in the actual fighting of the great war. That it has been the president's notion, as well as the sailor's, to share in the fighting is generally inferred since he was rebuked by Secretary Daniels a year ago for rendering a report upon the great naval battle off Jutland which was not considered sufficiently neutral. He was ordered to revise it.

This circumstance, however, was not the first which brought the American officer to the attention of the British public not indeed, his first public curbing from the navy department. He was officially reprimanded under President Taft in 1911 for his famous, and is it now appears prophetic, Guildhall speech. This address, the last drop of blood speech, became a subject of public conversation at the time of its delivery.

Addressing the lord mayor and officials of the city of London on December 3, 1910, he said:

"If the time ever comes when the British empire is seriously menaced by an external enemy, it is my opinion that you may count upon every man every dollar and every drop of blood of your kindred across the sea."

When he returned to his station at Guantanamo on his ship, the Minnesota, in the following January, and received his reprimand, he received an enticing offer from a steel corporation to leave the navy for business, but he declined. The Guildhall speech and the Jutland battle report both were characteristic of qualities in the admiral which Secretary Daniels has since come to recognize—independent thinking, frank speaking and driving enthusiasm. Just before he left for England in April as the head of the American naval commission he was made head of the Naval War college. In addition to this his capacity for leading the destroyer flotilla has been especially manifest since he commanded that section of the Atlantic fleet. At the end of two years at this post instead of taking the transfer which was due him, he requested Admiral Fletcher to be allowed to continue for further work which he had in hand. Admiral Fletcher approved.

Rear Admiral Sims has long been known in the navy as a man with [illegible] interests [illegible] known to [illegible] was for a time battleship [illegible] the most forceful [illegible] the navy for the new battleships, and it was due largely to his insistence that they were included [illegible] His particular [illegible] has been gunnery and [illegible] in [illegible] of the navy [illegible] sent [illegible] ordered.

In personal appearance Admiral Sims is tall and stout. He is a man of striking presence. He is 57 years old and [illegible] February. He was born at Port Hope, Canada, on October 15, 1858.

Admiral Sir David Beatty, who since Sir Jerry Jellicoe was made first sea lord of the admiralty has had command of the grand fleet, is a picturesque officer, whose career has been one of exceptional brilliance. Admiral Jellicoe in his recent shift in the admiralty due to the difficulties in meeting and overcoming the submarine menace, has been made chief of the naval staff, but this has not affected Sir David's command of the grand fleet.

Sir David, a fighting Irishman of the dashing type, was a hero of the British public for months after the battle off the Helgoland Bight in January, 1915, when he sank the German cruiser Blucher. His work in the great North sea battle on May 31, 1916, with the German high seas fleet was of a character which led directly to his promotion to the command of the grand fleet. This battle, probably the greatest naval fight in history, was first reported from Berlin and was made to appear as a distinct British defeat. From the Berlin accounts it was made to appear that the British fleet and Sir David's battle cruiser squadron in particular showed up badly. Later reports, however, established the fact that the German fleet worsted retreated to its own base and has never since put forth to sea. It also became known that Sir David, although drawn away from the support of the British main fleet and at one time facing 100 German ships, promptly accepted battle. His work in this and other actions has been so effective and individual as to become known at the Beatty touch."

SPOONING PAIR HAVE WOMAN COP ARRESTED

London (by mail)—One lost tooth and one blackened eye are the total war time casualties of the 560 police women who have helped to release "harness" Bobbies for the trenches. The tooth was punched out during a slight misunderstanding with a lady prisoner. Another minor difference of opinion between arrester and arrestee was climaxed by an unladylike wallop in the eye.

One police woman, Cecil Chapman, a police official said, was shocked by the hugging of a young soldier and a girl in public. She attempted an arrest, but learned that, as the pair were engaged, they had a perfect right to borrow and pay back kisses any time they pleased.

So the soldier had the police woman arrested for interfering.

Last Call for the Silo.

From Wallace's Farmer.

With prospective hay prices around $20 a ton, thousands of men who never before felt the need of a silo are erecting or considering the erection of silos this year. Three pounds of silage will take the place of a pound of hay, and will occupy only about a third as much storage space.

There is no question about the demand for silos this year on thousands of corn belt farms. The chief question is securing the silos. Manufacturers have advanced their prices on silos this year from 10 to 30 per cent over last year, although the raw materials from which silos are made have advanced considerably more than this. Three or four hundred dollars invested in a silo this year, however, will store more dollars' worth of corn silage than ever before; for, whereas silos have advanced not more than a third, the value of corn silage has practically doubled.

Thousands of men have foreseen this situation, but other thousands who need silos just as badly have been so rushed with other work that they have been unable to attend to the matter. We wish to urge these latter to lose no time in making arrangements for their silo needs at the earliest possible date. Some of the silo companies have already closed up their business for this year, owing to lack of materials. Others report that they will be completely sold out by the middle of August. Transportation facilities during the next two months will undoubtedly be very poor. There is every reason, therefore, to anticipate your silo needs immediately.

RECOGNIZE WOMAN AS EQUAL

Heads of Industrial Plants Say She Can Do Any Work Consistent With Strength Better Than Man

Once man pretended to place woman on a pedestal and worship her. Now, according to Donald Wilhelm, who reports "The Confessions of a Munition Maker" in the Century, he is forced to recognize her as an equal, and respect her. The quotation below states the opinion of a hard-headed factory foreman, on the importance of women in the world of labor:

"With one can see, isn't emotional. One can trust his judgment of women.

"That is why I was glad he was present in the officers' room of the company eating quarters when the report was made in detail of the strike scheduled to take place the following Monday morning. He made a speech, saying:

"Gentlemen, we've all known women practically all our lives. Most of us get to thinking that a woman can't do mechanical work because they're always willing to let a man use the hammer, that being something he thinks he can do. But a woman can do it. A woman can do anything that a man can do and most things better, but men can't do anything near what women can do. Now, maybe you can imagine what women can do in machines and I know what they can do. Leaving out big girls, I say women can do any kind of mechanical work that's consistent with their strength better than men."

Another superintendent, a new man, said he had thrown out a hundred men in his plant 'back in Ohio' and put girls in their places, and he had found them better all around."

What Ailed Smith.

A plainly dressed man, who introduced himself as Mr. John Smith, walked into a doctor's office in a Texas town and, having explained his symptoms, asked the doctor how long it would take to cure him. The doctor, who had treated the visitor with every possible courtesy, replied:

"You will require careful treatment under my personal supervision for about two months before you are able to resume your labors in the bank."

"Doctor, you are fooling yourself. I am not Smith the banker, but Smith, the street car driver."

"Is that so? Well, my good fellow, I don't see what you came to see me for."

Utter Indifference.

"No wonder she's unhappy. She doesn't know where her husband is half the time."

"A great many wives don't know where their husbands are half the time."

"Perhaps so; but he doesn't even take the trouble to make her think she knows where he is."

Sometimes you can pick out fools by their questions and wise ones by their answers. And sometimes you can't.

The Politest Man.

Vice President Marshall declares that the politest man lives in Newark, Ohio. Mr. Marshall made a campaign speech there last fall. When he was about half through, a man made his way quietly from the rear of the room up to the edge of the platform, waited until Mr. Marshall paused to swallow, at the end of the paragraph, and then offered to shake hands with the vice president.

"I'm sorry, but I'll have to bid you good night," the man said. "I've got to go home now."—F. C. Kelly, in Collier's Weekly.

Stilford—Since we have had children she has had no time.

The "lil ol circus" which blew into Klemme last week was sure a bum fizzle. They were scheduled to give a big band concert on the street that evening and so the Klemme band were courteous enough to turn the evening over to the show instead of giving the regular concert. We will say the so called circus band put on the bumest concert we ever listened to or hope to listen to again. The next time our band postpones a concert for some cheap show—they don't.

That County Day

Last week we stated that plans were being laid to hold a County Day at Garner in honor of the drafted men that were to leave the 5th of September. Owing to recent Government movements the plan has been changed and instead of calling out one-third of the drafted men in the first call the order has been changed and only 4 per cent will leave the county on September 4th. Therefore the Big County Day will be postponed until September 19th, when it is expected that 40 per cent of the drafted men will be called A committee has been named and this committee will co-operate with a committee in each town in the county and in that way Our Soldier Boys will be assured of a big county gathering at the county seat.

The Times, together with the committee that will be appointed here will keep you well posted in regard to the County Day. Make plans to be on hand when the time comes. We owe it to our soldiers to give them a good send-off.

WHAT WE FIGHT

"The war was begun by the military masters of Germany, who proved to be also the masters of Austria-Hungary. These men have never regarded nations as peoples, men, women, and children of like blood and frame as themselves, for whom governments existed and in whom governments had their life. They have regarded them merely as servicable organizations which they could by force or intrigue bend or corrupt to their own purpose. They have regarded the smaller States, in particular, and the peoples who could be overwhelmed by force, as their natural tools and instruments of domination. Their purpose has long been avowed. * * *

"If they succeed they are safe, and Germany and the world are undone; if they fail Germany is saved and the world will be at peace. If they succeed, America will fall within the menace. We and all the rest of the world must remain armed, as they will remain, and must make ready for the next step in their aggression; if they fail, the world may unite for peace, and Germany may be of the union."—Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States.

ROASTING EARS AT CHRISTMAS

Easy Thing if Corn is Dried on Cob This Summer, Then Soak it Out Next Winter

How'd you like to have corn on the cob for Christmas dinner? Easiest thing in the world, if you follow the directions laid down by the food drying expert at Iowa State college. Just dry the corn on the cob instead of cutting it off. Then on Christmas day get the corn out, cook it and it will look and taste just like corn that was gathered from the garden that morning.

The corn to be dried should be selected in the proper roasting ear stage After shucking blanch the ears in boiling water from 8 to 10 minutes, dip in cold water and dry. The blanching tends to set the milk in the corn and gives it a better color when dry.

The two best methods of home drying are the electric fan or sun drying. To dry, it should be placed on cheese cloth in a tray. Care should be taken that the corn does not sour in drying. When the corn is thoroly dry it should be placed in sacks or open containers until conditioned. Then tight containers may be used. For protection against the worms heat the corn in the oven at 140 degrees F. for five minutes as soon as taken out of the driers.

When the corn is wanted for use it can be soaked and cooked as fresh roasting ears.

Corn may be cut off the cob and dried in the same manner as on the cob. It should be spread thin on the cheese cloth.

About Iowa Day

IOWA DAY IS SET FOR OCT. 5

Iowa Day will be observed this year in all the schools and colleges of Iowa on Friday, Oct. 5. This decision has just been reached by the State Department of Public Instruction and Superintendent A. M. Deyoe is calling upon all of the school teachers under his jurisdiction to properly celebrate the day.

Last year Iowa Day was celebrated Oct. 20, but this year, it being the desire of the State Department of Instruction and the Greater Iowa Association to include this day as a part of the Greater Iowa week campaign, the date has been advanced. Special programs are being prepared by Supt Deyoe and Mr. B. M. Hoadley and will be forwarded to all public, private and parochial schools. The State Board of Education is cooperating and special exercises will be held at the University of Iowa, Iowa State College, State Teachers College and all of the other institutions of learning.

The Greater Iowa Association is preparing a sort of catechism on Iowa's history, her agricultural and industrial achievements and is varying the catechism so that it can be used in the primary gradesas well as in the high schools, colleges and universities.

GREATEST FOOD PRODUCTION IN WORLD HISTORY

The greatest production of food from any equal area of land, in the world's history,—this will be Iowa's record for 1917,—one of her contributions to the success of the armies fighting for a world democracy.

This is a broad statement,—and it is being sent to newspapers and magazines throughout the United States by the Greater Iowa Association's publicity department. It is based upon estimates obtained by the Greater Iowa Association from the U. S. Weather Bureau (Iowa Section), the Iowa Crop Service Bureau, county agricultural agents and various other authentic sources.

Many Truck Gardens

In fact, the grand total of Iowa's production this year never will be known, according to the Association's statement. In every city and town in Iowa, back yards and side yards and in many, many instances front yards have been growing potatoes and beans and beets and other garden truck. Owing to the active campaign of the State College of Agriculture there will be no waste or overproduction of this variety of foods.

The canning clubs have put hundreds of thousands of dollars' worth of vegetables onto pantry shelves for use during the winter months. While an effort has been made to guess at the amount of foods so grown and conserved, it is obvious that an accurate figure is utterly impossible. It was estimated that the garden truck grown in Iowa in 1916 was valued at $5,000,000. The approximate figure for 1917 will be $20,000,000,—or an increase of 300 per cent.

Millions In Oats

In 1916 Iowa produced approximately 185,000,000 bushels of oats. Present indications are that this year she will produce close to 240,000,000 bushels, or an increase of over 32 per cent. If this proportion of increase is maintained throughout the United States, Uncle Sam's oat crop will be more than 400,000,000 bushels greater than it was last year,—or a grand total of 1,670,000,000 bushels.

And if Iowa should produce 240,000,000 bushels of oats this year it will be just 35,000,000 more than the largest oat crop Iowa ever produced. It is causing some folks to do a great deal of thinking when they contemplate an oat crop 35,000,000 bushels more than ever in the state's history and prices higher than ever in the world's history.

Figure in the same relative increase in corn and wheat and hogs,—and then clip out this story and send it to the Kaiser.

Flies are More Dangerous Than You Think

Flies breed so fast it is difficult to stamp them out. But, at least, we can keep them out of our houses.

And we ought to keep them out—not only for our comfort, but for our health. Many people don't realize what great disease-carriers flies are. They often come laden with disease germs directly to our food.

Screen the house and porches well and you prevent disease. Also you add to your comfort and peace of mind.

It does not cost much to screen a house. Let us screen your house.

A spectrogram of Hubble's variable nebula N. G. C. 2261, which has as its nucleus the variable star R. Monocerotis, shows the nucleus and the nebula to have the same peculiar spectrum consisting of bright lines or bands—not those typical of gaseous nebulae—and a continuous spectrum. This observation suggests that the nebula shines by reflected light of the pulsating nucleus, and that the flow of the light pulses over the nebula causes its variation and could give its distance. From the material now available it is difficult to give any trustworthy value for the apparent displacement. It may be as great as 15 seconds of arc. Taking this value and the simplest case of displacement perpendicular to the line of sight, which would be given a maximum value for the distance and would generally overstate it, the parallax would be about 0.00027 or the distance some 12,000-light years.

During the year ending March 31 next $8,260,000,000 will be added to the gross debt of the British government, according to an estimate by the London Statist. If this estimate proves accurate, the gross debt will then stand at $27,630,000,000. Of this sum, however, $7,150,000,000 will represent loans to British allies and dominions, leaving a net debt of $20,256,000,000. At the close of the fiscal year ending March 31, 1914, the debt totaled $3,256,000,000, so that the war will have added $17,124,000,000 to the net debt if hostilities should continue until March 31, 1918.

The "Emilienne Moreau," one of the new roses that won a prize in the annual competition at the Bagatelle Rose Gardens, was named after the heroine of Loos, the girl who helped save British wounded under fire and even shouldered a rifle to help the soldiers drive the Germans from the town in the great battle which resulted in its capture. It is a magnificent white rose with very large petals and with a foliage of a very deep green. The Edith Cavell, one of last year's productions at the Bagatelle gardens, was shown alongside it.

The cockades of the French revolutionists were composed of the red of the Paris commune and the blue of the ancient monarchy. In the troubled times just before the deposition and execution of Louis XVI Lafayette, to signify the desire of the people for a reconciliation with their king, added the Bourbon white to the cockade. The tricolor as a national emblem was adopted by the convention in 1794.

Just before graduating last June as honor man at the Harrisburg (Pa.) Technical high school, modest John Watchman disappeared, leaving a note that he could not stand all this raving about being at the head of any class." A few days ago his parents received a letter which said only: "I am with the British army in France."

It is not likely that the apples on the apple tree as we know them were the tree or fruit mentioned in the bible. Most modern writers maintain that it is either the quince or the citron, as being more in accord with passages in scripture (Canticles ii, 3, viii, 5; Joel i, 12; Proverbs xxv, 11; Canticles ix, ii, 5, vii, 6).

The Mexican national commercial congress which convened in Mexico City about the middle of July recommended to the national congress that the exportation from Mexico of articles of prime necessity be prohibited. The list as outlined in the resolution would include corn, wheat, flour, beans and cotton.

Jemmy was continually boasting of his "family mansion in the old country." Pat who came from the same place in Ireland, became very tired of it and with withering scorn exclaimed. "Yer family mansion is it, Jemmy? Bedad, I could have rached down the chimney an' put the foir out wid me hand'"

Cheese today is not common among the Bedouin Arabs, butter being preferred. There is a substance closely corresponding to those mentioned in Samuel. This consists of congulated buttermilk, which is dried until it becomes quite hard. It is then ground and the Arabs eat it mixed with butter.

Due to the scarcity of broom corn, State Senator J. R. Domengeaux, of Louisiana, has experimented successfully with palmetto leaves as a satisfactory substitute. Experiments will also be made with palmetto roots in the making of pulps and paper. The supply of palmetto is inexhaustible.

In Exodus the "embroiderer" is contrasted with the "cunning workman." The art of embroidery by the loom was extensively practiced by the nations of antiquity. The Egyptians and Babylonians were noted for it. Embroidery with the needle was a Phrygian invention of a later date.

The Jews learned the art of brick making in Egypt. We find the use of the brick kiln in David's time (II Samuel xii, 3). A complaint is made by Isaiah that the people built altars of brick instead of unhewn stone as the law directed (Isaiah lxv, 3; Exodus xx, 25).

Cheese is mentioned only three times in the bible and on each occasion under a different name in the Hebrew (Job x, 10; I Samuel xvii, 18; II Samuel, xvii, 29). It is difficult to decide how far these terms correspond with our notion of cheese.

A good mushroom, properly cooked is a luscious morsel and as such is a wholesome addition to the dietary. If you are absolutely sure that the variety that grows on your lawn or in the neighboring fields is of the edible kind, by all means cook and eat it.

ATTACKS IDA COUNTY MAN WITH PITCHFORK

Farmer Knocks Hired Man Off Stack and Wounds Him Severely.

Ida Grove, Aug. 25.—T. P. Hahn, a farm hand who has been employed by Alfred Huffman, in this county, was assaulted by Hoffman yesterday with a pitchfork and was badly injured. Hahn was working on a straw stack when a dispute was started, and Hoffman, using the fork, knocked the hired man off the stack, cutting a gash across the head requiring some 15 or more stitches to close. It was necessary to bring Hahn to a hospital in this city. A big damage suit has already been started.

STILL FEAR FOR SAFETY OF NORTHWEST IOWA CORN

Sibley, Ia., Aug. 25.—There is general satisfaction on the part of the farming communities and the business men of this county with the crop results of 1917. The only exception to this general condition seems to be an element of uncertainty in reference to the outcome of the corn crop. Some good farmers are of the opinion that much of the corn, while healthy and vigorous, will not mature good ears before frost.

As an evidence that the general crop of the year is good, is the increased activity in real estate. There was a heavy rain here yesterday afternoon.

ROCK RAPIDS PHYSICIAN INJURED IN LOS ANGELES

Los Angeles, Cal., Aug. 25.—Dr. W. A. Conroy of Rock Rapids, Ia., who is visiting in Pasadena, suffered severely for his gallantry when he stopped on the road between Los Angeles and Pasadena to crank a motor for a woman whose car was stalled there. The engine back fired, struck the doctor in the side, breaking two ribs, one bone penetrating a lung.

Dr. Z. L. Malaby, of Pasadena, treated him and Dr. Conroy emphatically declared: "Never again, no matter how beautiful she is, will I stop to crank a motor for a woman."

RECRUIT MORE TROOPS FOR GAPS IN COMPANY M

Cherokee, Ia., Aug. 25.—To fill up the gap in Company M, caused by the leaving of 67 of the men to the "Fighting Third," the recruiting station at the armory was again opened today. Cherokee county's keen patriotism will soon cause the vacancies to be filled.

WOMEN TO WORK FOR NEXT LIBERTY LOAN

Brookings, S. D., Aug. 24.—Mrs. Ellwood C. Perisho has taken up active work as chairman of the South Dakota woman's Liberty loan committee, to which position she recently was appointed by Mrs. W. G. McAdoo, of Washington. Mrs. Perisho states that the general organization involves: First, the national committee of 10 members appointed by the secretary of the treasury to direct the activities of women in the sale of Liberty bonds, and a state chairman nominated by the national committee and the woman's committee of the council of national defense. The state chairman is to appoint a chairman from each county for thorough county organization in cooperating with the state chairman.

MANY OLD VETERANS TO ATTEND ARMY REUNION

Omaha, Neb., Aug. 25.—Many Nebraska old soldiers have indicated that they will attend the blue and grey reunion at Vicksburg, October 16 to 19. Seven hundred veterans have already declared their intention to be present at the reunion. The last legislature appropriated $20,000 to pay the expenses of transportation. The veterans expect to take advantage of the railroad summer excursion rates.

1,500 ADVENTISTS ATTEND MARSHALLTOWN CONVENTION

Marshalltown, Ia., Aug. 25.—Fifteen hundred or more Seventh Day Adventists, of Iowa, were in attendance last night at the opening session of the annual camp meeting and conference of the denomination, which will continue at Riverview park, this city, until September 3. Bishop Charles Thompson, of Minneapolis, president of the Northern Union conference, was the speaker of the opening session. Among the leading Iowa workers in attendance are Revs. W. A. McKibben, of Sioux City; William Ostrander, of Des Moines and F. M. Corbaley, of Dubuque.

IOWA BOY SEES SUBMARINE SUNK WITH HAND GRENADE

Marshalltown, Ia., Aug. 25.—At least one Iowa boy has been concerned in the sinking of a German submarine, according to a letter received here from Clarence Scott, a gunner's mate in the United States navy.

Scott tells of an encounter between a German U-boat and a submarine chaser. He was a member of the latter's crew, which was acting as a convoy to an American vessel. The submarine attacked the vessel, and the chaser drove her off. So closely did the chaser get to the submarine that the chief gunner landed a hit with a hand bomb. So terrific was the explosion that the chaser was damaged. The submarine was sunk. The crew was brought back to an American port by a United States destroyer.

REFUSES $42,500 OFFER IN SENSATIONAL DIVORCE

Grinnell, Ia., Aug. 25.—Mrs. Phoebe Estelle Gifford, of Grinnell, owner of the hotel Monroe property in this city, has filed a petition in divorce in the Poweshiek county district court at Montezuma. Frank H. Clifford is named as defendant. Many sensational allegations are made, and it is said the case will be contested. Mrs. Gifford has offered a settlement with her husband, it is claimed, agreeing to pay him $42,500. Gifford, however, refused the offer, and insists on an equal division of the property. A 160-acre farm in this county, a short distance from this city, was deeded Mrs. Gifford seven years ago, it is claimed in settlement of a divorce action she had started against her husband at that time. Gifford is now suing his wife in this county to have the deed set aside.

CHEROKEE TROOPS WRITE OF SUBMARINE ENCOUNTER

Cherokee, Ia., Aug. 25.—A Cherokee friend on Tuesday received a letter from Pat Riley, one of the Cherokee railroad men now with the expeditionary forces "somewhere in France." He says the trip was a very pleasant one excepting for the fact that their boat was attacked by a submarine, which created considerable excitement and alarm, but they escaped without any damage. The Cherokee contingent escaped sickness on the way over and all were in good spirits.

JEALOUSY INSPIRED ATTEMPTED MURDER

Girl Shot From Ambush at Marion, Ia., Had Been Warned by Friends.

Marion, Ia., Aug. 25.—The sheriff's posse today had found no trace of the would-be assassin who last night shot and dangerously wounded Miss Esther Tyron, of Perry, Ia.

The girl was entering the fair ground with Marion Robb, when a man stepped from behind a tree and fired five times at the girl. Two shots entered her head, and two penetrated her left side. The man who fired the shots escaped in the crowd that gathered after the shooting.

Robb said today he thought the shots were fired in an attempt to rob him, but police authorities were inclined to believe that jealousy was the motive.

Miss Tyron was rushed to a Cedar Rapids hospital where one of the bullets was extracted. Then she returned to the home of her grand parents where she was visiting while spending her vacation. The bullets were of small caliber and doctors say she will recover.

It is said the girl had been warned by friends of probable danger.

GERMAN PASTOR IS TOLD NOT TO LEAVE HIS HOME

Audubon, Ia., Aug. 25.—Rev. J. E. W. Starck, of Lincoln Center church, who has repeatedly been accused of acts of disloyalty, has been ordered not to leave his home without the permission of the city council of defense.

He is also compelled to discontinue the use of German language in his church and the school nearby which he conducts.

Starck was visited by four members of the county council of defense, accompanied by Special Deputy Ackey, of Harlan. He denied the charges made against him, but was compelled to surrender German Red Cross stamps to the council.

He has promised to obey all orders of the council, under penalty of severe punishment, without further warning.

Many Audubon county boys are in Uncle Sam's army and feeling here against the pro-Germans is very strong.

TREASONABLE LITERATURE FOUND IN IOWA SCHOOLS

Des Moines, Ia., Aug. 25.—Treasonable literature has been discovered in school libraries throughout Iowa.

German sympathizers, the department of justice believes, have extended their propaganda to the libraries because of the effect it might have on young impressionable minds.

Among these "gifts" are books defending German militarism and attacking American democracy.

A. P. Sherwood, of the United States department of justice, is in possession of copies of a book said to be one of the most treasonable of the lot, and arrests of circulators of these books and pamphlets and of publishers soon will be made by federal agents, it is said.

START COAL TRUST PROBE AT COUNCIL BLUFFS, PLAN

Council Bluffs, Ia., Aug. 25.—A letter from Attorney General Havner reached the office of the county attorney here last night asking prompt assistance in a proposed investigation of an alleged coal combine. The attorney general states it has been charged a combination exists between the coal producers and the retailers to the end that no coal is being shipped, that it is a nation wide agreement.

The attorney general asks the county attorney with the assistance of the sheriff to investigate, and if such a combination exists he wants to institute proceedings at once. It is stated that scarcely any coal is moving to Iowa and great distress will result unless action is prompt, and assurances were sent Attorney General Havner of hearty cooperation by the officials here.

PENNSYLVANIA MAN TO DIRECT CHILD INSTITUTE

Iowa City, Ia., Aug. 25.—Bird T. Baldwin, of Philadelphia, Pa., has been appointed director of Iowa's child welfare research station in connection with the state university, provided for by the last legislature, with an appropriation of $25,000.

He will come to Iowa City within a week to make preliminary arrangements for this unique undertaking, which, in the words of the act passed by the legislature, is designed to find the "best scientific methods of conserving and developing the normal child."

At present Dr. Baldwin is a professor of psychology at Swarthmore college and lecturer at Johns Hopkins university. He has studied or taught at a large number of the leading universities, and at one or two in Europe.

NOTED IOWA AUTHORESS DIES AT NEWTON HOME

Newton, Ia., Aug. 25.—Duliema Zollinger, authoress, died here today after an illness of five weeks. Among the literary works of the deceased was the "Widow Callaghan's Boy," which was published under her pen name of William Bachary Gladwin. She was born in Illinois in 1856.

GERMAN NEWSPAPER IS FORCED TO SUSPEND

Cedar Rapids, Ia., Aug. 25.—The Iowa Post, one of the oldest German papers in the middle west, suspended publication today. Pro-German activities, which lacked the support of loyal Germans of Iowa, caused the suspension, it was announced. Henry Guilding, the editor, has been violent in his attacks upon the government and was recently "lectured" by government agents.

TWO ARE ARRESTED AT BUCKEYE FOR TREASON

Eldora, Ia., Aug. 25.—John Wirds, jr., and his uncle Aite Wirds, were arrested at Buckeye, Ia., by United States Marshal E. R. Moore, under charge of violation of sedition and espionage laws of the United States.

John Wirds is accused of having been responsible for the organization of the branch of the "People's Council of Democracy and Peace," at Hubbard.

He also openly voiced opposition to the draft.

SAC CITY—E. L. Ahrens was unanimously chosen mayor of Sac City at an adjourned meeting of the city council. Mr. Ahrens was immediately notified of his election, accepted, his bond, signed by F. W. Loring and Malcolm Currie, was approved and within less than an hour after his election became the official head of the municipality.

MISSOURI VALLEY—Farmers of California Junction and near Modale are pulling their onions and find the yield to be from 350 to 400 bushels to the acre. Mr. McFerrin, of Modale, estimates his yield at 400 bushels to the acre, judging on the early harvest.

WOULD LYNCH FIEND WHO MURDERED GIRL

Resentment Runs High in Le Mars—No Clue to Slayer Has Been Found.

LeMars, Ia., Aug. 24.—Officers today declared that so far they had failed to unearth the slightest clue as to the identity of the person or persons who last Monday night murdered 12-year-old Alta Braun. On a chance that some development would reward his visit there, Sheriff Hugh Maxwell made a hurried trip to Cherokee, where the circus and merry-go-round, which were here on the night the girl was killed, had gone.

The sheriff said that he had learned nothing at Cherokee which is likely to throw light on the case. A report that several persons are under suspicion was branded as being without foundation.

Not in recent years has a crime here caused the resentment that surcharged the community upon the circulation of the news that the child had died the victim of a fiend. Groups of men and little knots of women in all parts of the city discussed the crime in a manner that boded ill for the murderer, if caught.

The dead girl had been living with her father and stepmother. Her stepmother having long been an invalid, the burden of the household duties had fallen on the little one. On the day of the night she was killed, Christopher Braun, her father, had given her money with which to attend a circus. She chose to spend a part of the money for a pair of white stockings, and the remaining 10 cents for rides on a merry-go-round.

Marks on her body and the torn condition of her clothing gave evidence of a struggle.

COOPERATIVE BUYING PLAN SAVING MONEY

Clinton, Ia., Aug. 24.—Right in line with the movement for federal or state control of coal prices to the consumer, is a cooperative concern which has been formed by over 100 of the employes of the Northwestern railroad and local industrial institutions.

The Economy Mercantile company, recently incorporated at $10,000 capitalization with shares of $1 each, is now delivering coal to its members at cost plus cost of handling, but on a strictly cash basis.

The proposition is the outgrowth of the cooperative coal buying which the shop employes started last winter. Eventually they expect to handle other products as well as coal. The men feel that they have struck a real blow at Mr. High Cost of Living.

J. O. McPake is president, H. B. Jones vice president, Charles Froeschle financial secretary, Charles Shaw recording secretary and E. J. Cook treasurer.

MISSING PASTOR WIRES WIFE, THEN VANISHES

Logan, Ia., Aug. 24.—Although very ill at the time, Mrs. C. C. Payton, wife of the local pastor who mysteriously disappeared about seven weeks ago, left at once for Wichita, Kan., when she received a message that her husband was there.

The Rev. Mr. Payton had again disappeared when she arrived in the Kansas town. Authorities believe that the pastor is a victim of aphasia which caused him to disappear in a similar manner in California some years ago.

The theory is that he recovered his memory long enough to wire his wife from Wichita, after wandering for many weeks, but that his mind again became a blank before she arrived. It is also believed that he may have started for his home in Logan just before his relapse, which would account for his sudden disappearance again.

UNABLE TO FIX BLAME FOR NEAR DISASTER

Charter Oak, Ia., Aug. 24.—The recent near wreck of a fast freight train and the fast mail on the Milwaukee railroad near Ute, which was only prevented by the quick action of the station agent at Ute, assisted by two farmers who flagged the freight train with lanterns, has aroused a decidedly lively controversy among railroad men generally and those interested particularly as to responsibility for the near catastrophe.

The operator at this point upon whom published accounts of the mixup place most of the responsibility for the near accident, insists that responsibility for the sending of the two fast trains toward each other rests equally upon himself, the train crew of the fast mail, the dispatcher at Sioux City, and the operator at Mapleton.

UNIVERSITY TO ACQUIRE 30 ACRES MORE GROUND

Iowa City, Ia., Aug. 24.—Wednesday is the day set for the appraisement of the land which is to be taken for university purposes on the west side of the river in what is known as Manville heights.

The 30-acre tract coveted by the state lies just at the west end of the new Iowa avenue bridge and is nicely situated for the purposes to which the university will put it.

The appraisement of the land is the first step in the procedure to place the state in possession of this much needed extension to the grounds and is a part of a comprehensive scheme to extend the university grounds across the river and provide more room for improvement and buildings.

In a letter to the state committee, the Commoner announced his decision to come. If possible Bryan will speak to the conscriptues at Camp Dodge.

G. Van Pelt, Wilbur W. Marsh, Waterloo; C. T. Curtiss, Ames; J. F. Eisell, Malcom; Henry C. Wallace, Des Moines; J. S. Doty, Shenandoah; R. W. Cassady, Whiting, and George W. French, Davenport.

RIOTING BLACKS COST 16 LIVES; MAY LOSE LIVES

Negroes Who Killed Officers, Houston Policeman and Civilians Ordered Out of City.

Houston, Tex., Aug. 25.—The death list reached 17, when H. A. Thompson, of Hempstead, Tex., succumbed to bullet wounds he received when the negroes fired into his automobile.

The 16th victim was E. M. Jones, a jitney driver, whose body was found near Camp Logan shortly before noon. His right arm was almost severed by saber strokes. There were numerous

Washington, D. C., Aug. 25.—The negro troops engaged in the rioting at Houston, Tex., will be withdrawn from Texas immediately, Secretary Baker today told Senator Sheppard, of Texas. Reports from Major General Parker, commanding the southern division, said the situation was under control and that no further rioting was feared.

Secretary Baker did not say whether the withdrawal of the Twenty-fourth infantry detachment from Texas forecast a new policy which would keep negro troops out of southern states. Senator Sheppard said he would ask that no negro troops except those of Texas origin be sent into Texas for training.

Secretary Baker also said that the Houston affair did not affect the policy of training negro troops in the south.

It is within the jurisdiction of the commander of the southern department to move the troops to any other point in his territory without orders from Washington.

Houston, Tex., Aug. 25.—More than 100 negro soldiers of the two companies of the Twenty-fourth infantry, which engaged in a riot last night and caused the death of 16, and the wounding of more than a score of persons, are being sought today by strong patrols of regulars and Illinois National Guardsmen under the command of Gen. John A. Hulen, governor of the city, now under martial law.

Three companies of coast artillery regulars from Fort Crockett reinforced the 1,000 or more Illinois guardsmen today and order, which was restored early this morning, is being maintained. Roll call this morning by Major Snow, in command of the battalion of negroes, developed 125 men were absent. Eighteen of these have surrenderd and others are being rounded up by the military patrols as the search of the negro district progresses.

Under military law it is stated, soldiers may be shot for having mutined and fired on their officers.

Open Fire on Homes.

Early today nearly all the negro troops were in their camp under a heavy guard. Seventy still were unaccounted for. Those in barracks, however, were said by one of their higher officers to be in an ugly mood.

The trouble is said to have been begun late yesterday after some of the negro soldiers had complained of treatment accorded them by members of the Houston police force. About 9 o'clock last night some 80 negroes, later being joined by others, formed at their camp and began a march toward down town Houston. Lights in residences along the way were shot out and a number of persons were wounded as they sat inside their homes. Crowds of Houston men with unarmed Texas guardsmen started for the camp, but stopped when an army officer mounted an automobile and addressed them.

Beyond Officers' Control.

Capt. K. S. Snow, commanding the negro troops guarding Camp Logan, early today declared that he attempted to control the men when he saw what was about to happen, "but they were beyond control and some 150 of them started to shoot promiscuously in the camp and soon scattered in every direction."

Kill Unpopular Policeman.

The dead police officers were among the first to reach the rioting negroes. One Rufe Daniels, helped to make the arrests yesterday afternoon that led directly to the riot.

According to police reports the trouble arose when a negress was arrested in a principal section. A negro soldier asked that the prisoner be turned over to him. A refusal led to an argument and the soldier was subdued and taken to headquarters.

Curious Soldier Clubbed.

A little later another negro soldier approached the policemen and asked concerning the first man. When told that the negro was at headquarters more words followed and this negro was sent to headquarters much used up.

From every source Thursday night came reports that this treatment of the soldier led to the riot. Previously the negroes had reported the happening to their officers. A conference followed between Police Superintendent Brock and army officers. This led to an order being issued to the effect that the negro troops are to be called "colored" troops by members of the police department.

Take U. S. Ammunition.

Evidences of the brewing riot became apparent as early as 7:30 o'clock last night. Maj. K. S. Snow, in command of the negro troops, said he noticed that the troops were wrought up over the treatment from the police. A little later word came to him that the negroes had entered the ammunition tent and armed themselves.

The commanding officer rushed to the scene and made an effort to stop the riot. The mob was beyond control. His estimate is that 150 negroes left the camp.

They began shooting at the camp and proceeded toward the city.

The Man of Constant Peeve.

Orville Dewey.

No man is more constantly unhappy, or makes others more so, than the impatient man. He is out of harmony with things; and all things fight and worry and wound him. He feels himself dishonored, too, by his impatience, and he does lose, so far as he indulges it, the true dignity of life. He is not cast, indeed, like the victim of sensual vice, into the slough of dishonor, his garment perhaps is not soiled; but it is burnt through, in a thousand spots, by the everdropping little sparks of petulance; and it is in tatters and disorder with the evercrossing flurries of angry passion; and he seems to himself and to others as one who scrambles through life, rather than as one who walks in the calm and dignified robe of conscious self possession. Constant fretting and faultfinding and breaking out into sarcasm and anger may bereave a house of all honor, peace and comfort, almost as effectively as gluttony and drunkenness. Or suppose that the fretful temper be hidden and smothered in the heart; then it wastes and consumes the springs of the inmost life.

The Modest Modernist.

Grant Showerman in the Unpopular Review.

The modest modernist is always in motion. He is the apostle of movement and the apostle of movements. He flits from movement to movement. He is always buzzing, sipping and darting away to fresh flowers. He keeps the rest of the world in movement — in neighborhood movements and national movements; in civic and patriotic movements; in theological, pedagogical, sociological and illogical movements; in dietetic, philanthropic, microscopic, and myopic movements. Every one of them is in turn "the most vital, the most far reaching, the most comprehensive, and altogether the most momentous ever initiated in this community."

The modest modernist says, "Do you know?" and "Do you realize?" a great many times when he tells you this. He makes frequent use of the word "constructive." He says: "Do you realise, my friends, that you and I, in this very community and at this very hour, are inaugurating a movement which contains greater constructive possibilities for the cause of civic and social betterment than all other present and past movements combined?" He says in parenthesis that he "speaks advisedly." He says it is strange no one ever thought of this before. He says all great things are simple. The modest modernist is talkative. There are some who call him chautauquative.

My Prayer.

Great God, I ask Thee for no meaner pelf
Than that I may not disappoint myself;
That in my action I may soar as high
As I can now discern with this clear eye.

And next in value, which Thy kindness lends,
That I may greatly disappoint my friends,
Howe'er they think or hope that it may be,
They may not dream how Thou'st distinguished me.

That my weak hand may equal my firm faith,
And my life practice more than my tongue saith;
That my low conduct may not show,
Nor my relenting lines,
That I Thy purpose did not know,
Or overrated Thy designs.

—Henry David Thoreau.

SAYS COAL MEN CAN'T WIN WITH CONTRACTS PLEA

Senator Pomerene, Who Drew Up Fuel Control Measure Declares People Will Get Relief.

RETAIL CUT IS EXPECTED

Profits of Jobbers Reduced So That Public May Receive Coal at Lower Price.

Washington, Aug. 25.—Henry A. Garfield, coal administrator, gave warning today that all the machinery of the government would be used to carry the benefits of prices the president has fixed on coal, through to the consumer and that if necessary to accomplish this end, the government will take over the mines.

Mr. Garfield warned the public that the government would not have its purpose thwarted on any technical grounds.

Washington, Aug. 25.—Will the coal administration fix retail prices on coal so as to give relief to the public? This is the question asked everywhere today. Retailers will insist they have contracted for coal at prices which permit no reduction in retail prices.

Senator Pomerene, who with Senator Cummings is author of the coal provision in the food bill, declared the public would get relief and retailers would not be allowed to take refuge behind allegations of old contracts.

Washington, Aug. 24—Completion of the administration's program for federal control of the coal industry was in sight today when officials turned their attention to the fixing of retail prices and the regulation of distribution. Dr. Harry A. Garfield, appointed to head the coal administration, will take active charge of the work as soon as he finishes his duties with the committee fixing prices on wheat.

The new anthracite prices effective September 1 vary but slightly from the rates now charged at the mines under a voluntary agreement made with the federal trade commission by operators. Retail costs probably will drop as a result of drastic restrictions placed on jobbers' profits

The Scale of Prices.

The anthracite scale for railroad owned mines, which include practically all the big producers, follows:

White Ash—	Stove, $4.90.
Broken, $4.55.	Chestnut, $4.90.
Egg, $4.45.	Pea, $4.10.
Stove, $4.70.	Lykens Valley—
Chestnut, $4.80.	Broken, $5.00.
Pea, $4.00.	Egg, $4.90.
Red Ash—	Stove, $5.30.
Broken, $4.75.	Chestnut, $5.30.
Egg, $4.65.	Pea, $4.35

Other producers may charge an advance of 75 cents a ton of 2,240 pounds over the figures set for the railroad owned mines. Those who incur the expense of rescreening it at Atlantic or lake ports may add an additional 5 cents a ton.

Anthracite jobbers delivering coal at Buffalo and points east of that city will be allowed a maximum profit of 20 cents a ton of 2,240 pounds, and those delivering west of Buffalo may charge an excess of 30 cents. The combined gross profits of any number of jobbers handling a shipment must not exceed the limit of profit set for a single jobber, except that a screening charge of 5 cents may be made on water shipments at Atlantic or lake ports.

Jobber Profits Fixed.

Bituminous profits for jobbers are fixed at 15 cents a ton of 2,000 pounds; and the same restrictions that govern dealings by a number of anthracite jobbers apply to bituminous transactions.

The president's order forbids railroad mines from selling to other mines, and prohibits dealers from selling coal produced by railroad owned mines on a basis of prices fixed for other mines.

Cedar Rapids, Ia., Aug. 24.—A young woman, a servant named Boyer, dropped dead at the Linn county home today as a result of a self inflicted pistol shot. She wounded herself in the head. No cause is assigned.

2,000 OFFICERS WILL REACH CAMP MONDAY

Microbes of Two Sexes.

The department of agriculture has investigated the life history of several varieties of microbes, and finds that these microscopic creatures are more highly organized than we have suspected in the past. They pass through several stages of growth, which has often been mistaken in the past for distinct varieties. They were found to be divided into two sexes, while in the past the microbe has been considered sexless organism.

Let in the Sun.

A shuttered window does not put out the sun, but it keeps it out. Discontent in a girl's heart does not change the beauty and helpfulness there is all about her, but it keeps her from discovering it. Open the shutters of the soul's windows. It will not make any difference to the sunshine, but it will make all the difference in the world to you.—Exchange.

Act Happy and Become So.

Be happy. Do not worry, do not allow yourself to become a grouch; do not "get mad." Remember that psychologists now contend that you do not clench your hands because you are angry. You are angry because you clench your hands. So do not clench them. Act happy, and you will become so. Act young, and you will remain so.—The World's Work.

Game in Mexico.

Mexico cannot be said to offer a field for hunters of big game, and the term, "a sportsman's paradise," which is sometimes applied to it, is an exaggeration. Among animals may be enumerated the peccaries or javelines, deer, rabbits, hares. The reptiles include alligators, turtles and iguanas. Whales, seals and sea lions are encountered on the Pacific coast.—New York Telegram.

Flower Hints.

Always pull the leaves off the stalks of flowers before putting them in water—those leaves which would be in the water, not those above it. And with flowers from any hard stalked sort of shrub the bark should be peeled off as well as the leaves.

Home Town Helps

PLANNING HOME IS BIG TASK

Many Problems of Location and Construction Must Be Solved Before Excavations Are Started.

A location for a home should be a site with a restful aspect. Home builders should persistently and seriously consider all of the numerous features entering into the situation and construction of a house which they themselves are to occupy.

Very many problems of location and construction must be solved even before excavations for a home are started. All members of the family which is to be the first occupant of the building should be privileged, in fact, they should be invited, to freely express their ideas as to proper location and construction, both as to type or architecture, and construction materials. Every requisite of those who are to occupy the house, every possibility and limitation should be carefully considered and decided upon before the site is chosen and before the plans are drafted.

If part of the family goes to business each day it will be necessary to construct the home near a railway station or trolley line. If there are children of school age in the family it is imperative for the young folks' welfare to select a building site in a community with good schools and to locate the home within a reasonable distance of the school or schools which the children will attend. These and other details should be given careful consideration.

TURNING SEWAGE INTO ASSET

British City Shows How Profit Can Be Made by Scientific Handling of Waste Effluent.

Through installation of modern sewerage and garbage disposal systems many cities of this country are securing valuable by-products from waste, but our municipalities could probably emulate to advantage the method adopted by an English city in creating an asset out of a waste effluent difficult of disposal, says the Manufacturers' Record. According to a statement in commerce reports by the United States consul at Bradford, England, that city recovers the grease in the sewage coming from many wool-washing and scouring establishments located there and turns it into a profitable by-product.

This grease by-product is said to be of value in the leather-dressing trade and to some extent in branches of the textile industry.

The sales of the recovered grease by the sewage works of the city of Bradford were reported to amount to $389,320 in 1916 at the present high price of $122 a ton, and it is estimated that for this year over $340,000 will be realized from this source, in addition to nearly $25,000 derived from the sale of manure or fertilizer made from the sludge left after the extraction of the grease. Because of the development of this by-product it is thought the Bradford sewage work will be self-supporting in 1917.

Danger in Municipal Pigs.

One method of disposing of garbage is that adopted by many municipalities of feeding it to pigs. Approximately 10 per cent of the total collection in 1909, according to reports of cities of 30,000 and over, was handled in this manner. This may be a slight improvement over dumping it, but only for small places where the garbage can be handled before it decays. So serious a matter is this system that the state of Colorado has passed a law compelling all meat markets to state whether the pork sold by them was fed on untreated garbage. Another state board of health finds that of 1,000 hogs fed on city garbage, 33 per cent had tuberculosis. "The idea of eating garbage-fed pork is disgusting," says one mayor. The eating of it may be injurious.

Hainault Forest.

Hainault forest, where the London county council golf courses will be closed for the remainder of the war, bears a title that torments the antiquaries, some of whom have gone to Germany for a derivation. But "Hainault" is really a modern corruption of a word variously written "Hineholt" or "Henholt," which stands obviously for the Saxon hean-holt, meaning "worthless wood." This same name of "Hyneholt" was formerly borne by part of the royal forest near Colchester. Anciently Hainault forest comprised that portion of the great forest of Waltham which lay south and east of the River Ruding, and was administered by the same officials as Epping forest.—London Chronicle.

Employers Build Homes for Workers.

Coincident with the change of the building trend toward manufacturing work, there is a tendency for corporations to build moderate priced houses for their employees. The obvious necessity of keeping labor stable and halting the roving tendency of employees at the present time undoubtedly has much to do with this movement. It is probable that the idea will be adopted more widely as the war progresses and labor stringency increases.

No Person Can Afford to Go Without a Vacation

It's false economy to begin saving at the cost of health.

When it comes to a vacation, the best is none too good—
—and the best doesn't mean the most expensive,
—Colorado for example.

Go where you can get the most diversion and nerve rest,
—ask any physician if that advice isn't sound,
—and Colorado admittedly offers far more diversion than any other vacation land in America,
—plus the most wonderful scenery and the widest variety of sports in the world,
—plus the far-famed, invigorating, nerve-resting Colorado air.

The DESTROYER

By BURTON E. STEVENSON

(CHAPTER NINE—Continued.)

"Do you remember the number of the stateroom?"

The clerk spread out before Lepine a cabin plan of the ship.

"It was this one, sir," he said, and placed his finger on 514; "an inner room, you see, on the upper deck."

"You asked the man's name, I suppose?"

"Oh, yes, sir. I caused him to fill out the usual blank. Here it is."

Lepine took the blank and looked it over. It stated that stateroom No. 514, on the Prinzsessin Ottilie, for the sailing of September 27, two berths, second class, had been purchased of Thomas Cook & Son by Ignace Vard, of New York city, the berths to be used by himself and his daughter; and that he had paid for these berths the sum of 640 francs, being payment in full, and receipt of which was acknowledged. The blank also stated that Mr. Vard was a naturalized citizen of the United States, and had lived in that country for 10 years.

"The sailing was from Cherbourg?" Lepine inquired, when he had assimilated all this.

"Yes, sir."

"At what hour?"

"About 4 o'clock, sir—4 o'clock yesterday afternoon."

"How did it happen, sir," Lepine asked, turning to the manager, "that the notes were not deposited until yesterday?"

"Our deposit is made up at 3 o'clock each afternoon," the manager explained. "The notes came in too late for Tuesday's deposit, and were placed in our safe until the next day."

Lepine made a brief entry in his notebook, handed back the blank and rose.

"I thank you very much, gentlemen," he said. "You have been most obliging. The information you have given me will be of the very greatest service."

And with that he took his leave, returned light heartedly to his office and sent a wireless to the captain of the Ottilie. The negative could not escape him now; it was merely a question of arresting him as he left the boat at New York soon, soon, Lepine would have the pleasure of putting him on the grill, and, once there, the detective felt sure that there would be some important revelations before he got off again. One fact surprised him—that Vard should be an American citizen, but perhaps that was not the truth. If it was the truth, it would make the arrest at New York a little awkward, a formal complaint would have to be made, a charge of some kind trumped up. But there was no hurry—a week remained in which to mature the plans.

So Lepine, after sending a brief report in cipher to M. Delcasse, turned to the work which had accumulated during his absence in a happier and more contented frame of mind than he had enjoyed for some days.

"I shall relish my lunch today!" he reflected, but, alas! it was just as he was preparing to sally forth for it that the blow fell.

"A message for you, sir," his secretary said, and handed him a light blue envelope.

"Ah!" said Lepine, "a wireless!" and he ripped it open eagerly. Then he remained staring at it with astounded eyes. Here is the message:

September 28, 11 10 A. M.
Prinzsessin Ottilie, Radio via Cherbourg.—Lepine, Paris: No record of Ignace Vard and daughter on Ottilie. Stateroom 514 unoccupied.

CHAPTER X.

THE LAND OF FREEDOM.

The old town of Cherbourg was experiencing its semiweekly apotheosis. For five days of the seven a duller place would be difficult to find, but on Wednesdays and Saturdays, when the great trans-Atlantic liners were due to pause in the outer harbor and take aboard the multitudes homeward-bound to America, the town was transfigured. The transfiguration, indeed, began on the previous evenings, for it was then that the less knowing and more timid of the tourists began to arrive.

The knowing ones, having once tasted the Lethe of Cherbourg, remained in Paris until the last minute, and stepped from the boat train to the waiting tender. But the less well informed came on the day before—and never, for the remainder of their lives, forgot the dullness of their last day in Europe. Then there were the nervously anxious, their peace of mind already wrecked by the vagaries of the European baggage system, who dared not run the risk of arriving at the last moment. So they, too, journeyed to Cherbourg the day before the sailing date, in order to have a clear 24 hours in which to search for the pieces which were certain to be missing. That day at Cherbourg was always an expensive one, for the hotel keepers of the place, having to live for seven days on the proceeds of two, arranged their rates accordingly.

At the edge of the narrow strip of rock strewn sand which constitutes the beach at Cherbourg, stands the Grand hotel—familiar name to every traveler in Europe, where even the smallest hamlet has its "Grand." The one at Cherbourg is a rambling, three storied frame structure, with a glass enclosed dining room overlooking the harbor, and here, at 10 o'clock on the morning of Wednesday, the 27th of September, in the year of our Lord, 1911, Daniel Webster was disconsolately eating that frugal meal which is the French breakfast. Not the great Daniel—all well informed persons are, of course, aware that he passed to his reward some 60 years ago—but a well built, fresh faced, rather good looking young fellow, still on the right side of 30, who had most inadvisedly chosen to appear in this world of trouble on the 100th anniversary of the birth of the great Daniel, and who had forthwith been handicapped with his name.

John Webster, an honest farmer of the Connecticut valley, had always been a worshiper at the shrine of the eloquent New Englander, to whom he fancied himself related, and when, having taken to himself a wife, that wife presented him with a son on the very day when the centenary of his hero's birth was being celebrated, the coincidence appeared to him too momentous to be disregarded and the boy was christened Daniel.

It was a thing no thoughtful father would have done, and as Dan grew older, he resented his name bitterly. It was the subject of brutal jests from his playmates, resulting in numberless pitched battles, and of still more brutal hazing when he pursued his predestined way through the portals of the university at New Haven. Here he was promptly rechristened Ichabod, and his real name was gradually forgotten.

In the depths of his heart, John Webster may perhaps have hoped that this was to be a real reincarnation. If so, he was doomed to disappointment, for the younger Daniel gave no promise of being either a statesman or an orator. But he took to ink as a duck to water, was never so happy as when his pen was spoiling good white paper, was elected editor of the News, and, commencement over, took the first train for New York, stormed the office of the Record, for which he had acted as college correspondent, and demanded a job.

He got it; and began anew the task of living down his name. Always, when introduced or introducing himself, he saw in the eyes opposite his own that maddening glimmer of amusement. Then he gritted his teeth and waited for the joke. There were 14 possible forms that it might take. Tempted often to return to that rocky Connecticut hillside, he nevertheless stuck it out, and, as time passed, found he didn't mind so much. He even reached the point where he made bets with himself as to which of the 14 it would be. And he progressed in other ways: the material symbol of the progress being that, instead of cub reporter at $12 a week, he was now one of the trusted members of the staff at six times that salary.

Also he was seven years older, and this had been his first long vacation, six weeks in England, Belgium, Holland and France—glorious weeks; but his eyes were aching for the lights of Broadway and his fingers itching for the pencil. The most exacting and bewitching of all professions was clamoring for him again.

Having disposed of the rolls and coffee, he rose reluctantly, stepped out upon the beach, and filled and lighted his pipe—with a grimace at the first puff, for French tobacco is the worst in the world, outside of Germany. Before him lay the mighty breakwater which guards the harbor, with its lighthouse in the middle and its fort at either end, while to his left were the great naval basins, hewn from the solid rock. To the right, below the high sea wall, the narrow beach stretched away, empty and uninviting.

Dan felt depressed. Cherbourg, evidently was not an exciting place. He had never seen an uglier beach, but, after a moment's hesitation, he started off along it. Perhaps, farther on, it might improve.

The tide was going out, and in the little basins in the sand minute crabs and strange sea midgets scuttled about panic stricken at finding themselves marooned; here and there a stranded jelly fish glowed like an iridescent soap bubble, and, farther out, an ugly mud flat began to be revealed by the retreating water. Some distance ahead, a ridge of tumbled rocks ran from the sea wall down into the water, and, as he drew nearer, he saw that on one of the rocks a girl was sitting.

He glanced at her as he passed, and would have liked to glance again, for he had never met more arresting eyes, but he was going on with face rigidly to the front, when her voice startled him.

"Pardon, monsieur," she said. It was a contralto voice, of a quality that made his pulses leap.

He stopped short and turned toward her, incredulous that it could be he to whom she had spoken. But there was no one else in sight; and then he saw that her hands were gripped tightly in her lap and that her lips were quivering.

"Is something wrong?" he asked, and took a step toward her. "Is there anything I can do?"

"Oh!" she cried, her face lighting, and a wave of color sweeping into her cheeks. "Then you are an American!"

"Yes; thank God!"

"So say I!" she echoed. "For myself, I mean. I also am an American. We will speak English, then."

"I should much prefer it," he smiled. "My French is wholly academic—and covered with moss, at that. It doesn't even enable me to get my eggs turned!"

She looked at him, the color deepening in her cheeks. Dan, looking back, decided that he had never seen such eyes; he could scarcely believe that she was an American. She did not look in the least like one. But she was speaking rapidly.

"I am in trouble," she said, "as the result of my own carelessness. I was crossing these rocks, without watching sufficiently where I was going, and my foot slipped. See," and she swept aside her skirts. "I cannot get it out."

Dan was on his knees in an instant.

"Is it hurt?" he asked.

"I think not; or at most only a little strained. But it is wedged between these big rocks, and I cannot move it."

Dan touched the foot, and found that it was, indeed, wedged fast. Then he examined the rocks, and finally, bending above the smaller one, placed his arms firmly about it, braced his feet and lifted. It would have been worth while to have seen the play of his back and shoulder muscles as the strain tightened, but it was over in a moment. For the rock rose slowly, slowly, and the foot was free. He let the rock drop softly back, stood up and brushed the sand from his sleeves. The girl bent and rubbed her ankle.

"Is it all right?" he asked.

"I think so," and she took an experimental step or two. "Yes; not even sprained. That reminded me of Porthos," she added, looking up at him, her eyes very bright.

He laughed.

"Porthos would have done it with one hand," he said, "while saluting you with the other."

She hesitated a little, looking along the beach; and he, guessing her thought, raised his cap and started to walk on. But again her voice stopped him. Perhaps she, too, was something of a mind reader.

"I owe you some thanks, you know," she said. "You must'nt go off till I've paid them!"

Dan swung around, his face glowing.

"Not thanks!" he protested. "But if you would take pity on a lonely exile and talk to him a little, you'd certainly be doing a noble action!"

"Is it as bad as all that?" and Dan noticed how the corners of her eyes crinkled when she smiled.

"You can't imagine how lonely I've been!" he said. "Especially the past few days. I didn't feel it so much till I was starting home. America!" and he took off his hat.

"The land of freedom!" she added, softly.

"Do you feel it that way, too?" he asked eagerly. "I've never been much of a patriot—just took things as a matter of course, I guess; but six weeks in Europe is enough to make a patriot of any American. Whenever I see the old flag, I feel like going down on my knees and kissing it. I've just begun to realize what it stands for!"

She had turned back toward the hotel, walking slowly with Dan beside her, and her face was beaming as she looked up at him.

"You are right—oh, so right!" she cried. "And how much more would you realize it if, like me, you had been born in another country and felt for yourself the injustice, the oppression, of which you have seen only a little! For such as I, America is indeed the Promised Land!"

So she was foreign born! Dan glanced at her with a shy curiosity.

"You are a Russian?" he asked. "Pardon me if I seem intrusive."

"You do not. No, I am not a Russian. Worse than that! I am a Pole!"

The words were uttered with a tragic emphasis which left him speechless. He could think of nothing to say that was not banal or superficial, and he realized that here were deep waters! He glanced once or twice at her face, which had grown suddenly dark and brooding; then, with a little motion of her hands, she seemed to push her thoughts away.

"You do not know much of Polish history, perhaps," she said, in a lighter tone. "But if you are fond of tales of heroism, you should read it, for it is one long heroism. It will help you to realize more fully what your flag stands for. It is my flag, too; I have lived in America nearly 10 years; and never do I grow so angry as when I hear an American speak slightingly of his country. Here is the hotel. Forgive me for talking like this; but it has done me good to meet you!"

"And me!" he said. "Must you go in?"

"Yes; my father will be wondering where I am. Good by."

She held out her hand and gave his a frank little pressure. Then she turned and left him.

He watched until the door swung shut behind her; then he walked on slowly, past the great basins, over the drawbridge, along the crooked streets of the old town, past the station, and finally he stopped in the shadow of a crag of rock which sprang abruptly 300 feet into the air. Its summit was crowned by the frowning walls of the great fort which commands the harbor, and along the face of the cliff, blue with heather, a narrower footpath wound deviously upward. He ascended this for a little way, and then stopped, his elbows on the wall which guarded it. Before him stretched the bay, shielded by its jetty, and beyond rolled the white capped ocean. That way lay America.

"The land of freedom!" he murmured, and his eyes were bright. "The land of freedom!"

CHAPTER XI.

SHIPMATES.

When Dan got back to the hotel for lunch, he found that there had been many arrivals during the morning. The Adriatic was to sail that afternoon, as well as the Ottilie, and the long dining room at the hotel was a busy place. As the head waiter led him to a seat, he caught a glimpes, far off, of the girl of the morning. She was sitting at a table with a white haired man—her father, of course—with whom she was talking earnestly. She did not look up, and, in another instant, Dan's guide had pulled out a chair, and he found himself sitting with his back toward the only person in the room who interested him.

The One He Wanted.

Young Isaac stood in line at the library to draw out a book. When his turn came he asked, respectfully, "Please give me Miss Alcott's Jew book."

The young lady looked puzzled. "A book by Miss Louisa M. Alcott?" she queried.

"Can you remember the title?"

"No; but it's her Jew book," he insisted. "Well, I'll read over some of the titles of her books to you, and perhaps you can tell me the one you want when you hear it read." Patiently she began, "Little Women, Little Men, Under the Lilacs, Rose in Bloom—"

"That's it, that's it," cried Isaac—"Rosenbloom."

Harder Still.

"It's hard to lose a beautiful daughter," said the guest, sympathetically, at the wedding feast.

"It's a blame sight harder to lose the homely one," replied the old man, who had several yet to go.

Germans Attack French Class in Bomb Throwing At "Commencement"

With the French Armies in Champagne.—(by mail)—This is the sorry story of a German battalion that made the regrettable error of attacking a graduating class of the French grenade school just at the moment when the graduates were all lined up for their final graduating exercises.

When the French grenade graduates had succeeded in imposing tranquility on the part of the Germans until their graduating exercises could be completed,—200 Germans dead could be counted on the field of operations whilst the French lines on a 600 meter front had been advanced 300 meters. The graduates had three killed and 17 wounded for their total losses.

The custom of the French to hold graduating exercises in their front line trenches has arisen from the necessity of changing their whole system of infantry tactics as a result of the exigencies of the present war.

Instruction camps were established back from the front lines, and as fast as possible troops were withdrawn from the fighting ranks and given a month or two of schooling. From an old time infantryman who knew nothing but the use of the rifle and bayonet, the men come out of these schools highly developed specialists either as hand or rifle grenade throwers; portable machine gun experts; baby cannon sharpshooters or bayonet sharks.

Graduates Don't.

When a class has completed its full course of instruction at one of these schools, it is taken to the front line trenches and for its final graduating exercises makes an attack on the Germans—usually for the purpose of capturing a trench, observatory or some small fortified position.

It was one of these graduating classes that was in the act of undergoing its final graduating exercises that the Germans accidentally attacked. The class consisted of grenade throwers, portable machine gun marksmen together with a few rifle grenadier, baby cannon sharpshooters and bayonet experts. In all the class numbered less than 100.

They had just taken up their positions in the front line trenches on the northeastern slope of Mount Cornillet for their final graduating exercises to be performed. The Germans from one observatory on this side of the and the graduates were to demonstrate their fitness to pass from the period of new infantry tactics to that of actual war, by storming and capturing the observatory.

Pie For the Graduates.

The last preparations for the exercises were being made when, just a little before the attack was scheduled, the Germans suddenly launched an attack of their own against the trenches held by the grenade graduates. It is doubtful if a bigger piece of luck has ever offered to France's new infantry specialists.

Loaded to the teeth as they were with grenades and munitions for their own attack, they merely laid back in the trench until the German assaulting column was within stone's throw and then opened up with all the perfected weapons of modern infantry tactics. In less than two minutes there was not a German left standing. Although it was still all of 15 minutes before the graduates were scheduled to launch their own graduating attack, the bombardment was too propitious, and they went over the French rampart, across the dead bodies of the assaulting troops, captured the last remaining German observatory on Mount Cornillet in precisely the manner they had been taught to do it at the school of new infantry tactics.

Only four prisoners were taken by the graduates—and all four of these wounded—but when the attack was over there were over 200 German dead on the ground to be buried.

At least one of the grenade graduates had the Medaille Militaire conferred him on the field of battle whilst many others received citations for the Croix de Guerre afterwards. All in all it was about the most successful graduating exercises that any class in the new infantry tactics has yet enjoyed.

It is in these new infantry tactics that the American troops are being drilled upon their arrival in France. Well trained American troops from the regular army and militia, are expected to master one of these specialties.

MOBILIZING NATURAL RESOURCES.

The endeavors of the advisory commission of the council of national defense to arrive at lower prices on copper, aluminum and coal are better than leaving us entirely at the mercy of the market, but the old standards of business economy are not good enough for a nation consecrating its blood to the cause of democracy. The integrity and devotion of the members of the commission are unimpeachable, but their methods are the antiquated ones of competitive business. This is shown in their naive trust that railways can be individually managed and still mobilized for national service and in their basing the price of coal on the cost of production without regard to the efficiency of production.

The federal trade commission is a scientific body, able to view business problems with the ability of business men but without their bias. In examining the coal situation the trade commission was able to point out at once that anthracite and bituminous coal cannot be treated separately. The difficulty of transporting bituminous coal has led to such prices that in many cases anthracite coal has been substituted. Nearly 2,500,000 more tons of anthracite coal were mined in April and May of this year than in the corresponding period of last year. Instead of being stored for next winter hard coal is replacing soft coal. The latter is 40 per cent short of its maximum because it cannot be moved.

Bituminous coal is loaded direct to cars without storage. If it cannot be shipped it is not mined; workmen are not employed, labor conditions are deranged. With coal and labor's cost of living at war prices mines are idle for lack of coal cars. The public is clamoring for the product of the mines and the miners are idle. Speculators are holding coal cars for storage purposes and lake boats that bring grain east are going west with water for ballast because transportation is not mobilized. The railways ask for an increase in freight rates partly because of the price of coal, which is high because they do not furnish cars to transport it. Our allies have either taken over the coal mines or coal distribution. We are trying to maintain the integrity of our mines and our railways by old business methods.

The trade commission shows that costs of production of coal in different mines differ widely and that the proposal to pay mine operators a maximum prices compels the public and the government to pay for all coal the price necessary to secure the last 10 per cent of the supply that is needed, and to over pay on the 90 per cent that is cheaper to mine. Unless the coal is pooled and the consumer charged a uniform price, he must pay the price of the least efficient mine. If the government pooled the coal it could close inefficient mines, whose product was not needed, turning over to more efficient operators, the labor and car supply thus released, and secure the miners more satisfactory employment; and then distribute to the consumer at a uniform but reasonable price.

Thus, while the business men of the council of national defense would secure relative expedition and economy as measured by war prices and profits, management, a governmental agency, the federal trade commission—is required with expert knowledge to show a better way. Anthracite coal cannot be mobilized without mobilizing bituminous coal under the same management. Neither can be mobilized economically without operating all transportation facilities as a unit. The mobilization of our natural resources is a task beyond politics or business. It must be done by scientific experts.

England's Food Control.

From the Washington Post.

"Food prices in the United States are unreasonably high, but I am sure that as soon as the government takes control of the food supply prices will regulate themselves, as they did in England and France," said Thomas Graham, a merchant of London, at the Willard. "We had the same experience in England that they did in France, but when the government called upon the people to observe wheatless and meatless days they did so. Indeed, it is not difficult to go without wheat bread or meat for a day or two. There are many substitutes for wheat bread and for meats. Fish has grown largely in popularity in England since the war began and maize meal bread has become almost as popular as wheat bread. Practicing food conservation among the English people is not confined to the working classes. Persons of wealth and position could afford to pay high prices for food, but are setting a good example to others who cannot afford it. From the king down to Lloyd-George down to the humblest worker in England the people are striving earnestly to conserve the food supply, and they are succeeding marvelously.

"Everywhere in England there has been an increase in the production. The absence of men to work the soil, of course, has been a handicap, but the women have taken the places of the men who are fighting at the front, and are succeeding admirably in making the earth to yield. There is scarcely a yard in London, I believe, that has not its plot of vegetables and where there is greater space potatoes and corn have been planted. It would be the same here, I presume, once the people realize the necessity of greater production and conservation."

Wheat on Every Farm.

From Better Iowa.

"At least 10 acres of winter wheat on every farm"—that is the fighting slogan of Iowa state college, which urges Iowa farmers, at least in the southern and central two-thirds of the state, grow as large an acreage of winter wheat as possible. It will pay to plant winter wheat, there is no doubt of that. The world wheat supply is but two-thirds of the demand. No one need fear a slump in the wheat market. "Do the best we can, the supply will fall short of this demand," says an agricultural authority. Iowa has never grown as much winter wheat as she should. But it is a comparatively safe crop. There have been seasons when it has been killed, such as last, but scarcely in the history of the state have there been two successive winter killings of the wheat crop. At least it's worth the chance. Two big factors in winter wheat success lie in early preparation of the seed bed and in planting good seed. To help farmers get good seed, the agricultural extension department has prepared a list of men who have seed wheat available. The list will be sent to any farmer. The college advises that oats be taken out of the way and the ground plowed for wheat as soon as possible. Tests show that early plowed wheat land returns from $4 to $5 more per acre than late plowed. In case plowing must be delayed, it is a good plan to follow the binder immediately with the disc or else disc before the shock rows. This will keep down weeds and help conserve moisture.

Times Have Changed.

From the Newark News.

Little Mildred came home from a visit to the home of little Harriet awfully rude to my Harriet," said Mildred. "She talked cross to me and wouldn't let me play with her, and she told me her father was rich and everything. That's what I should call real rude. If Harriet had treated me like a little girl when you were a little girl, what would you have replied?" asked the mother. "Why, I guess I would have said, 'Yes, and you were a poor girl when I was a little girl.'" Mildred's mother's face was a study.

We've Been There, Too.

LIMBS MADE OF CARDBOARD

Artificial Leg, Invented by Danish Doctor, Enables Wearer to Walk Soon After Amputation.

A Danish doctor at a hospital in Paris has invented a cardboard leg which enables the wearer to go about without crutches two days after his limb has been amputated.

The materials used are two sheets of cardboard about three-sixteenth of an inch thick, and bandages soaked in a starch solution. After careful measurements have been taken the cardboard is cut into what looks like two peg-tops, which after being soaked in the bath fold round each other and are secured with bandages.

The principle is that of an egg in a cup, and the patient can wear the leg long before the wound is completely healed. He can thus get air and exercise, which it is usually impossible to obtain at this phase of his convalescence; also he has to suffer none of the inconveniences of crutches, a stick sufficing for his needs. The leg, properly treated, lasts from six months to a year, by which time a permanent artificial limb is ready to be fitted.

Harvest the Crops — Save the Yields

On the battle fields of France and Flanders, the United States boys and the ian boys are fighting side by side to win for the World the freedom that Prus- would destroy. While doing this they must be fed and every ounce of that can be requisitioned must go into use to save this year's crop. sanity in the United States is decidedly on the increase. A New Place for Orderlies.

There is evidence that life in the army has its humorous side even in war time. In a story that recently went the rounds of the English press a newly appointed officer who was making his first visit to the mess, with the usual inquiry of "any complaints?" arrived at one mess somewhat earlier than he was expected, and the orderly of the day, being taken by surprise and in his shirt sleeves, dived under the table to save a reprimand.

"Any complaints?" asked the officer.

The corporal, grasping the situation at once, answered for the absent orderly.

"None, sir."

"Who is this?" asked the officer, suddenly catching sight of the orderly under the table.

The corporal again rose to the situation.

"Orderly of the day, sir," he answered.

"Oh!" said the officer, and passed on.

The next mess were quite prepared, with the orderly, spick and span, standing at attention at the head of the table.

"Any complaints?"

"None, sir," answered the orderly.

The officer looked him well over.

"And who are you?" he asked.

"Orderly of the day, sir."

"Then why the dickens aren't you under the table?" was the unexpected retort.

1,000 STUDENTS TAUGHT TO SAVE MEN'S LIVES

Great Lakes, Ill., Aug. 14.—Greatest of all its kind in the world is the Great Lakes naval training station hospital school. Here 1,000 students are learning one of the most important duties of modern warfare, that of caring for the sick and wounded.

In war, before medical science took its place in the field as an important a part as any fighting unit, more deaths resulted from disease and infection of wounds than from the wounds themselves. Millions of lives were thus sacrificed.

The "hosapps," as the hospital apprentices are known here, are the "high brows" of the enlisted men at the station. On account of the intensive training and study necessary for a man to learn the course which fits him for his work in the short training period, only those with good basic educations are accepted for enrollment in the school.

Probably half of the men are from colleges and universities and many are graduate physicians and registered pharmacists. The others are either high school graduates or those who have finished the greater part of their academic courses with high grades.

Schooling of the men begins in the detention camp where all recruits arriving at the station are held for three weeks apart from the main station, lest a new arrival develop a communicable disease. First aid and the rudiments of seamanship which every enlisted man must know are taught here. Once having passed through the detention period, study begins in earnest. In the three months' preliminary training the jackie learns how to compound simple prescriptions, to feed and nurse the sick and wounded, further steps in first aid, and chemistry. It is said that in the three months' course in chemistry, the jackie learns more of this science than the college student does in the whole of his freshman year. Not only is a full elementary course prescribed, but there is also analysis of foods for the detection of preservatives, administration of anaesthetics, and the action of common drugs, including treatment for poisons.

Emphasis is laid upon camp sanitation and personal hygiene. Botany, with special reference to common wild plants of medicinal value, is also studied.

Less than a year ago the Great Lakes school had but 50 students. With the increased complement of the navy to 150,000 men, the hospital corps was correspondingly increased, representing 3 per cent of the total enlisted strength. More than 300 graduates are sent to sea for duty on the ships every month.

Grow Potatoes in Window Boxes.

Hotels and restaurants in some western cities have agreed with the local park department to cut out all the eyes from the potatoes when peeling them and to save these eyes for planting.

It may be news to most people that potatoes can be grown in window boxes, but the Popular Science Monthly is authority for the fact and it gives the following directions as to how to grow them:

From each batch of potatoes prepared for cooking a piece from the rose end (the end where most of the eyes are) is cut off before peeling. Each piece should weigh not less than one and one-half ounces. These pieces are planted in shallow window boxes in leaf mold, cocoanut fibre or sand. The boxes are kept in the window of a cool but frost proof room and the sprouts are grown in them until they are from one-half to one inch high. Then they are planted as seed potatoes.

"To prevent the cut pieces from shriveling before they are planted, the cut surface is dusted over with dry, powdery plaster of Paris, dry slaked lime or finely powdered charcoal."

The value of potatoes as food lies not only in their containing starch in a readily digestible form and mineral substances that are of importance to the body, but also in their counteracting the tendency of meats, eggs and fish to create acid conditions.

But potatoes are not by any means a perfect food. They are almost useless to young babies because they contain very little fat or protein. They are fuel, but have little importance as builders of tissue.

A recent bulletin of the department of agriculture says: "Greater care than commonly is exercised should be taken in peeling potatoes. Very often 20 per cent of the potato is pared away. This results not only in the waste of considerable potato, but also in the loss of one of the most valuable portions of the tuber, since the soluble mineral salts are present in the material near the skin, which would be removed and thrown away. These salts can be preserved by a more careful removal of the skin, as by shallow paring or rubbing, and also by boiling or baking the potatoes in their packets." When potatoes are pared before boiling they "should be dropped into boiling water instead of being placed on the stove in cold water. By the latter method there is twice the loss of protein or tissue building elements, resulting from the former. The loss of mineral matter is about the same by each method. There is no loss of starchy material in boiling unless portions of the tuber breaks off.

"Practically the only loss when potatoes are baked in their skins is of the water which escapes as steam. The more or less common custom of pricking holes in the skin of baked potatoes or breaking them is explained by the fact that unless the steam which is formed inside the skin is allowed to escape it will change back into water and produce sogginess."

The Bridge for Kaiserism.

From Collier's.

There are in America a great many specimens of foreign language newspapers. The editors and publishers of these newspapers have boasted that they had built a sort of cultural bridge connecting the new world and the old. They made the passage from Europeanism to Americanism easier for the newcomer, unused to our institutions as to our speech. In the case of the German press in America, however, the foreign language newspaper seems to be only a bridge to bring kaiserism into American communities. This must stop.

How? One way would be for congress to forbid the printing of newspapers or periodicals in an enemy language. Such a measure might not reach our George Sylvester Vierecks and our Frank Harrises, but it would go a long distance toward purifying our country and its press. Another, a less radical step, would be to oblige the publisher of German newspapers (and perhaps every foreign language publisher) to print all his articles and news in English as well as in the foreign language. If this were done, there would be presented to the alien or incompletely Americanized immigrant a cheap and easy means of improving his vocabulary and his knowledge of the English language generally—day by day or week by week.

Cause for Tears.

NEBRASKA FOLK STIRRED BY MANDATES OF OUIJA

Grand Island, Neb.—Have you ever read a ouija board or watched its movements to telling of a deep mystery which has never come to light?

So effectively has one of these boards worked on the susceptible in one locality that it started county officials to working on a case which still is unsolved.

It was about 10 years ago that John Bosselman, prominent farmer of western Merrick county, near Worms, suddenly disappeared. Nothing has been heard from him since.

At that time indications were that he had left for parts unknown and there is still no evidence to contradict this belief, but the presumably mystic board worked so strangely on this case, and comment became so strong in that community, that the attention of Sheriff Clark and County Attorney Ross, of Merrick county, were called to it.

According to the reading John Bosselman had come to his death from eating poisoned peaches and he died in the haymow of a barn. His body, in being taken down, fell to the ground on some hay, and when someone dropped in at the place the body was covered up with hay until the visitor had gone. Later it was taken to a cellar and buried. So strong did this story prey on the minds of the people that the county authorities were called upon to act.

Sheriff Clark, Attorney Ross, and some of the county residents recently went over to the place and dug five different holes under the eight-foot square cellar.

They found no trace of a disturbance of the soil and with this the "board" story vanished as a dream from the minds of many.

There are still some, however, who superstitiously cling to the story and believe there might be some semblance of truth in it.

Maqe Your Wife Your Receiver.

There is a story in the American Magazine in which a man who hasn't been able to get along on his salary installed his wife as temporary receiver. It worked wonders with him. Here is part of the story:

"What you want,' said Tudd, smiling, 'is to go into the hands of a receiver—a temporary receiver—like your firm did. You said they did, didn't you? How they coming out?'

"'Fine!' said Brett.

"'That's good. And that's what you need—to go into the hands of a temporary receiver. You ain't a bad business but you've got yourself all balled up. You ought to go to somebody and say: 'Here' I've got my affairs all balled up, and I can't seem to pull out and get my debts paid and everything cleaned up, and it is worrying me to death, and if somebody don't do something I'm going to have a nerve smash and go plumb bankrupt! Here, you take me over and see what you can do!'"

Brett drew a deep breath and looked at Tudd questionably. Tudd was a success and a kindly man. If Tudd would—

"And the person to be your temporary receiver,' said Tudd, 'is your wife, of course.'"

Jane Cowl Talks About Hard Work.

Jane Cowl, the famous actress, has written an article for the American Magazine in which she says:

"I have no hard luck story to tell, as I was barely 21 when I first played a leading role in "Is Matrimony a Failure?" and that after less than six years' experience. But, heavens! how I had to work during those six years! Not that I minded it—on the contrary, for never was work more congenial or done under more ideal conditions, or more quickly and substantially rewarded.

"If only this could be made clear to the hundreds of thousands of girls in America who seem to think the stage is an easy road for the idle woman! There must be hundreds of thousands, to judge from the letters that come to me through the mail, nearly all asking 'How did you get on?' 'What influence did you use?' 'What chance do you think there is for me?' During the run of 'Within the Law' these questions first began to pour in. At that time I used to be very conscientious about answering them, and really struggled to try and help the writers. But I soon found that what they really meant was: 'How shall I succeed without work?' They all professed to be willing and anxious, and all that sort of thing, but when their motives were thoroughly sifted it became obvious that the stage to them was synonymous with an easy life for good-looking women. How can I make it sufficiently emphatic to the feminine readers of the American Magazine that success without hard work is just as impossible as it is in Mr. Schwab's Bethlehem Steel Works."

This Barber Is Worth $300,000.

The American Magazine has an article about a barber who does not need your tip. The writer says:

"A few months ago a white haired gentleman, 83 years old, stood in the doorway of a barber shop. His eyes were dimmed with tears as he gazed upon this superbly fitted room. He saw courteous, rapid workers attending to the wants of the many customers who came and went; he watched the use of every instrument obtainable to insure the comfort of the patrons; he heard the click of the cash register as it quickly received the coins; and yet he was sad. For he, Jacob Hysler, had sold his barber shop in the Hotel Manhattan, New York, where he had been for 20 years, and although 83 years old, he felt lonesome and useless. He retired with $300,000, a town house, a country place, and two automobiles. He has shaved five presidents of the United States and other celebrities, and yet he is said. For Jacob Hysler wants to keep on working."

An Equality of Prices.

"Mr. Wilson's letter on prices," says the New Republic, "did indeed reveal one perfectly solid and yet dazzling brilliant piece of new policy. 'We must make the prices to the public the same as the prices to the government.' There shone Mr. Wilson's genius at its brightest of political discernment and declaration. Certainly the private buyers of the United States, when once the government is buying at prices known to be 'just,' will not contentedly buy at higher prices thereby known to be 'unjust.' In one sentence Mr. Wilson boldly and conclusively extinguished the hope entertained in many quarters that a commercial favoritism to our relatively few citizens on service in France might patriotically purchase a commercial impoverishment of the mass of our people elsewhere."

Tolstoi Saw It.

Tolstoi.

You are young and I am old. But as you grow older you will find, as I have found, that day follows day, and there does not seem much change in you, till suddenly you hear people speaking of you as an old man. It is the same with an age in history: day follows day, and there does not seem to be much change, till suddenly it is found out that the age is become old. It is finished; it is out of date.

The present movement in Russia (1906) is not a riot; it is not even a revolution; it is the end of an age. And the age that is ending is the age of empires—the collection of smaller states under our large state.

Syrup of squills, for many years a favorite remedy for the relief of colds, is obtained from a plant known as urginea scilla.

Crops on Wheels.

Bumper crops in New Jersey are being put on wheels and rolled right into the city markets, fresher and faster this year than ever before, and for the first time since the growing of perishable products became an extensive industry in the state the farmers feel themselves to some degree independent of railroad schedules and freight rates.

Motor trucks have solved the problem of fast delivery for Jersey farmers. Hundreds of big cars, some of them with a carrying capacity of several tons, have been put on the roads between the farms and markets this season. Many of these auto trucks are owned by the farmers themselves, having been purchased to replace horses and market wagons.

The Reason.

"Let that man down easy."

"Why should I?"

"Because he's so hard up."

China's one mutual life insurance company last year paid $800,000 in claims.

The Great Need.

The Prince of Udine, head of the Italian commission, said at a luncheon in New York:

"The Germans need, above all things, a spiritual bath or cleansing. When I contemplate them I feel like the restaurateur.

"A restaurateur in the Galleria in Milan was waited on by a tramp who wanted work. The restaurateur, being short-handed, agreed to take the tramp on. But, heavens, he was dirty.

"'I'll put you at the dish washing,' said the restaurateur, and then he took out a two-lira note. 'But, here, take this first, and go and get a bath.'

"As the tramp, bowing and scraping, started off, the restaurateur called him back and said:

"'There may be some change. In that event, take another bath.'"

The Potato Blessing.

Riding outside the city, one will not fail to see the wide expanse of potato plants growing luxuriously, and forthwith he indulges in anticipations of the golden plenty that is soon to be the good fortune of our people. But clouding these anticipations is a dark fear that the speculator will invade these premises and get nearly all these potatoes into his own hands and by some sort of restriction or limitations so work the prospects that he will be able to keep up the price and gather in the profits, says the Ohio State Journal. It would be a decided advantage to the public welfare if it could be so decreed that no producer should sell to a mere speculator. There is no oppression in that. Of course, it might stave off a little inconvenience, but it will pay in the end. Let us hope that the beautiful potato prospect will turn out a public blessing.

YES! MAGICALLY! CORNS LIFT OUT WITH FINGERS

You say to the drug store man, "Give me a small bottle of freezone." This will cost very little but will positively remove every hard or soft corn or callus from one's feet.

A few drops of this new ether compound applied directly upon a tender, aching corn relieves the soreness instantly, and soon the entire corn or callus, root and all, dries up and can be lifted off with the fingers.

This new way to rid one's feet of corns was introduced by a Cincinnati man, who says that freezone dries in a moment, and simply shrivels up the corn or callus, without irritating the surrounding skin.

If your druggist hasn't any freezone tell him to order a small bottle from his wholesale drug house for you.—adv.

THE PRACTICAL, BLACKSMITH W. F. PAVEY

Work began Monday at Garner oiling the streets of that city. Every business man got out real early in the morning and did his share of the street sweeping. The streets have been put in condition for the oil the past week and are well graded and smoothed. The oil is heated and forced into the surface of the street. This is a good improvement for Garner and one that can be profitably followed by every enterprising town.

Better Conditions For Iowa Children

Active Work at Iowa's New Child Welfare Research Station to Commence This Fall

Iowa's leadership over all the other states in the United States will not be limited to its agricultural interests in the future. An appropriation by the last state legislature for the establishment of a child welfare and research station may be the means of making Iowa the peer of other states in a product which has hitherto been neglected generally—the normal child.

Thousands of dollars have been spent on defectives but Iowa's undertaking in opening a child welfare research station is the first case in which a state has made any well defined attempt to better the condition of its normal children who constitute well over ninety per cent of the child population. The work has begun. Prof. Bird T. Baldwin, a noted child welfare expert, has been made director and he has already made plans for the work of the unique research station.

Normal Child Neglected

The normal child is capable of much greater mental and physical development than exists today, in the opinion of Dr. Baldwin. By making detailed scientific study of the factors in the physiological, mental, pedagogical, social, and moral elements of children it will be possible, he asserts, to raise the standard of Iowa children just as the standards of grain and live stock have been elevated by scientific methods. Unused, untrained, and undiscovered physical and mental resources will be developed in children by this new work.

About Cow Testing

DO YOU CONSIDER A COW TESTING ASSOCIATION A FAILURE?

Contributed by F. R. Sawyer, Tester

The success of a cow testing association depends upon what? I believe upon the number of men who have paying herds.

Many of the successful herds in this state have become so through knowledge gained from their association.

Your herd book records should place your boarders upon the market.

Some are not satisfied with their Short-Horns because they do not give enough milk. Others are not satisfied with their Holsteins because the milk is not rich, and would like to try another breed, but either breed is a success if the right man has them, because he would get rid of the individuals not making him a profit.

Interested members are usually the successful ones, and the successful ones will not ask to drop out before the year is up, but will want to be members next year—and the Klemme cow testing association will never cease.

Is your separator a cream robber? It is if it tests above 5-100 of 1 per cent.

Morningside Addition Nearly Completed

The finest and most desirable building site in Northern Iowa, the Morningside Addition, is rapidly nearing completion and will, in a short time, be offered to the public.

All of the cement side-walks have been laid, with the exception of two blocks, which the promoters have lately decided to put in, are now completed.

Among some of the desirable features offered are a good sized drain tile from the addition down the road to the creek. This drain is of ample size and has plenty of fall to insure each and every part of the addition good drainage, which means a good dry cellar to the owner of any lot. City water pipes will be laid to the addition so that each owner of a lot will have this modern convenience. The road between Main Street and Morningside will be graded up and put into good condition next week and will make a nice automobile drive out around and through the addition. Those contemplating building should take into consideration all of these things and also of the fact that taxes are very low in Klemme in comparison with other towns in the state.

The plat of the new addition has been accepted by the Town Council and has also been recorded at the Court House in Garner.

As soon as all of the various improvements are fully completed the addition will be offered to the public. If you intend to build, either now or some time in the future, we urge you to look over these fine lots, take particular note of the desirable features, the location and the fact that you will be building in a part of the city where all of the homes will be new and modern. You cannot find a better location anywhere in the city.

Why Henderson Did Not Fly at the County Fair

We received a letter from Mr. H. C. Meyer, Secretary of the Hancock County Agricultural Society in regard to the Aviator's Exhibition that was to have taken place at the fair. Mr. Henderson, the aviator, was unable to appear at the fair due to trouble with his engine. The Fair Association decided to donate the amount that they would have paid to Mr. Henderson to the Red Cross. A check for that amount was made out and sent to T. B. Erwin, Field Director, at Waco, Texas. This was a very thoughtful act of the Association and will be met with pleasure from the people. The money could not have been put to a better use than this.

Flies are More Dangerous Than You Think

Flies breed so fast it is difficult to stamp them out. But, at least, we can keep them out of our houses.

And we ought to keep them out — not only for our comfort, but for our health. Many people don't realize what great disease-carriers flies are. They often come laden with disease germs directly to our food.

Screen the house, and porches well and you prevent disease. Also you add to your comfort and peace of mind.

It does not cost much to screen a house. Let us screen your house.

Warning that Great Britain could not go on spending money at the present rate without serious disadvantage, was given recently in the house of commons by Andrew Bonar Law, chancellor of the exchequer. The disadvantage, he said, would be realized more completely when the war was over than now. So long as the government was raising funds for prosecution of the war by loans, Mr Law told the house of commons, the country was living in a false atmosphere. The position after the end of the war, he predicted would require all the skill and ability which the government could exercise. He added that he would like to have raised a larger portion of the war expenditures by revenues, but he pointed out the dangers of excessive taxation.

A tax of five mills on the dollar has been placed on the capital of all private charitable institutions in Mexico, effective next September.

British old age pensioners who hitherto have received 5 shillings a week pension will now be paid 7 shillings and sixpence, the chancellor of the exchequer has announced.

The Stockholm authorities have begun a campaign against rats by offering a reward of about 2½ cents for every carcass delivered. While it is hoped thus to reduce the rat plague considerably, the chief end is to secure an important addition to the stocks of fats available for the making of soaps and lubricants. The rat carcasses are treated in a "corpse utilization establishment," where, after the fat has been boiled out, what remains is converted into a poultry food. South Sweden has for some time been utilizing cadavers of various animals in this way. A considerable amount of fat is also secured by skimming large containers placed in the sewers leading from hotels, restaurants and other places where there is an unavoidable waste of fat.

The steady rise in the price of necessities of life in Japan is calling forth protests from many quarters, especially from the ranks of the salaried workers. In many cases private employes have raised wages to meet the new conditions and the government is considering some measures of advancing salaries. The giving of bonuses already has begun. The demand for high priced labor in the commercial and manufacturing branches is causing many young men and women to resign from the government service and the result has been that both telegraph and telephone departments have suffered.

Dr Addison minister of reconstruction discussing the future of the chemical industry with representatives of the trade insisted on the necessity of increased production to pay for the war and to meet preparations that the Germans were making for industrial effort after peace. He indicated that his policy would be to assist the trade in every possible way to meet the dislocation that would take place when the factories caused to produce war material, and said he wanted them to give workmen a direct interest in the introduction of improved methods which were essential to the success of the industry.

The effect of the English corn production bill on the value of land throughout the country is most marked and there are more inquiries for farms and small estates than can possibly be satisfied. The speculator and financier are said to be already operating and instances are quoted of agricultural land changing ownership twice a week, each time at a profit. A prominent auctioneer at Devizes, Wiltshire, said land was selling better now than for 25 years and during the present month his firm disposed of over $6,000,000 worth at from $75 to $400 an acre.

Down in Dorsetshire, England, there has been established a "republic" called the "Little Commonwealth," which has its own coinage and which is used as a reformatory for youngsters from 2 years of age upward. The experiment has proved a success. The children sent down there from Metropolitan police courts to reform earned 8 to 9 cents an hour out of which they paid $2.75 a week for board and lodgings. The "republic" has been recognized by the home office as a certified reformatory.

The Vienna correspondent of the Berliner Tageblatt asserts that huge fortunes are being made on the Vienna bourse by speculation in shipping shares. These are being forced up by a group of Trieste financiers and, as an instance of the remarkable rise which has occurred, the correspondent says Austro-American shares which stood at 540 in April were quoted at 1,860 in July, while those of other shipping companies are being quoted proportionately high.

A movement has been started in Mexico City to induce the government to forbid the sale of vessels flying the Mexican flag and engaged in commerce to and from Mexican ports, and their transfer to other flags. The originators declare that the removal of these vessel from the Mexican trade would have a detrimental effect on Mexican commerce.

Sap is pumped up through the wood in a tree and will even go through dead wood but will not return by the same medium. Therefore a tree may live until the roots starve. Sap ascends on the inside and descends on the outside. Therefore the descending sap alone builds new tissue of wood and bark.

Baron Fujitaro Otori has been named as Japanese minister to Mexico. Baron Otori formerly was secretary to the Japanese embassy in Rome, and it is expected that he will make a journey to Tokio before coming to Mexico.

Nutrition of school children has been better since the beginning of the war than before, asserts the school medical officer of the London county council. Infectious diseases among school children decreased last year.

If every one of the country's 2,000,000 homes throws away one slice of bread a day, it means wasting daily 875,000 pounds of flour, or enough for more than 1,000,000 loaves of one pound a day.

A deer's new horns are called "velvet" because they grow inside of a tough skin which is coarse and brown, like plush. For a long time he will not thrash his horns in the brush.

The Southern California Retail Grocers' association has joined the California Orange Growers' Exchange to make orange juice a competitor with grape juice as a national beverage.

South African farmers are planting larger areas in sisal than they have done in the past, recognizing that the cost of operation decreased as the size of the plantation is enlarged.

A new seaport recently built by the government on the east side of the island of Luzon will shorten the voyage to the Philippines from American ports.

FARMER HANGS SELF FROM LIMB OF TREE

George Schutt, of Near Correctionville, Ends His Life With Children's Swing Rope.

Correctionville, Ia., Sept. 1.—The swing in the dooryard of his home, with which his children played, was used by George Schutt, aged 55, this morning as the means with which to end his life by hanging. No particular cause for the act has been assigned.

The body was found by a neighbor about 6 o'clock this morning dangling from the tree, the feet clear of the ground. The body was still warm. He apparently had climbed into the tree, knotted the rope about his neck and jumped, though his neck was not broken by the fall. So apparent was it a case of suicide that Coroner E. A. Blood did not consider an inquest necessary.

Schutt is survived by a wife and six children. He was a retired farmer. So far as known he had no financial or other troubles.

$450,000 ONION CROP NOW BEING MARKETED

Clinton, Ia. Sept 1.—Nearly 500 carloads, or 10 solid train loads of 50 cars each, of onions are now being shipped from the fringe of territory along both banks of the Mississippi river between Clinton and Davenport. This territory has come to be known as one of the greatest onion growing sections in the world. The crop represents a valuation of approximately $450,000 at the present price of 90 cents a bushel or $1.75 a 100 pounds.

By far the heaviest shipments come from Pleasant Valley, a little station on the Clinton-Davenport interurban, where the pioneers in the onion industry have their fields. Thus far more than 160 car loads have been shipped from this station and 100 more will move in a week or two.

Bettendorf is shipping 50 car loads, East Davenport 75, Rock Island, Ill., 25, and Hampton and Fulton, Ill., 25 car loads each. The greater portion of the crop is sent south and east to the Atlantic seaboard. A few minor shipments go west and north.

The 1917 crop is exceptionally heavy, running from 600 to 800 bushels to the acre. If the ground is kept free from weeds the cost of cultivation is small, so that the growers net about $500 per acre from their crops.

SIOUX CITY GIRL AND MAN HELD AT LEMARS

LeMars, Ia., Aug. 31.—Action may be taken by the United States marshal's department in the case of Joe Scola, a foreigner who gives Omaha as his place of residence, and who was arrested yesterday at Craig, near here, in company with Elsie Palmer, a Sioux City girl. The couple were brought to LeMars by Sheriff Hugh Maxwell, who had received a report that Scola had threatened to kill the girl. Sheriff Maxwell said today that when the girl, who had been consorting with the man, declared that she would leave him, Scola produced a revolver and frightened her into remaining. The girl told officers that Scola had induced her to leave Sioux City, and that she had since been traveling around with him. A charge of lewdness was placed against both. Their hearing has been set for next Monday, and they are held in custody, in default of bonds in the sum of $200 each.

RESIDENT OF LEMARS ENDS HIS OWN LIFE

A. T. Alfred Leaves Note to Family and Commits Suicide by Hanging.

LeMars, Ia., Sept. 1.—After inscribing minute instructions as to the manner in which he wished his business affairs closed up, A. T. Alfred, aged 68 years, early this morning went to a barn at the rear of his home here and hanged himself. Following the discovery of the note which Mr. Alfred had left on a dining room table, relatives found the dead body at about 7 o'clock.

Mr. Alfred had been a resident of Plymouth county for 47 years, having come here from Story county, Iowa, where he had been a schoolmate of George McLain, present mayor of LeMars. In the spring of 1870, Mr. Alfred took up a homestead and he farmed in Plymouth county for about 35 years. For a few years he taught school.

About 10 years ago he was overcome by sunstroke, and he has ever since suffered periods of ill health. In the note left by him Mr. Alfred stated that he was a sicker man than his friends had realized.

He is survived by Mrs. Alfred and three daughters, Mrs. James Demster, Neligh, Neb., Mrs. George Pinney, Armour, S. D., Mrs. R. S. Wells, LeMars, and Miss Laura Alfred, LeMars.

LET CONTRACT SOON FOR CHEROKEE POSTOFFICE

Cherokee, Ia. Sept 1.—Unofficial information contained in a telegram received by Postmaster L. A. Wiwel brought the information that the contract for the new federal building in Cherokee, bids for which were opened August 22, will be awarded some time this week. Two of the bids were within the appropriation or the amount estimated for the building. Considerable satisfaction is expressed by the postoffice force, who are hampered by lack of proper facilities in the present location, to properly take care of the increasing business of the Cherokee office. It is more than likely that the building operations will be commenced this fall.

BELGIAN WOULD AVENGE WRONGS DONE HIS PEOPLE

Ida Grove, Ia., Sept. 1.—A few hours before Company B entrained from this place to go to Deming, N. M., Leo De Cloedt, native Belgian who has been working at the mason trade here for a year past enlisted and went with the company to the concentration camp. De Cloedt has been in the United States for five years and when he left Belgium there were four brothers and five sisters, besides his parents. After the war broke out he heard frequently from the family, but for six months he has had no word from any member of the family and he fears that they have either been killed or made prisoners and his sisters made the victims of the passion of the invaders. The suspense was so great that he enlisted and hopes to get to France in time to avenge the crimes that have been committed on his people. De Cloedt had been saving and frugal and hoped to get his people out of Belgium, and had on several occasions during the past year sent money to them which no doubt found its way into German hands.

UNITED DANISH SOCIETIES LAUD WILSON'S ATTITUDE

Council Bluffs, Ia., Sept 1.—Sanctioning heartily the unselfish sacrifices to which our country today stands committed in the cause of the welfare of all mankind," the national convention of the United Danish Societies of America, meeting here, unanimously adopted and wired to President Wilson a resolution indorsing his answer to the pope's peace plea as a "true interpretation of the purposes of the United States in this war."

The resolution reads:

"To the President of the United States, Washington, D. C. The United Danish Societies of America in convention assembled at Council Bluffs, Ia. do hereby have the great honor of greeting the president of our adopted country.

"We reaffirm our devotion to the principles of American democracy. We glory in its achievements of the past. We sanction heartily the unselfish sacrifices to which our country today stands committed in the cause of the welfare of all mankind as announced by you, our president, repeatedly in your message to our congress and people. We indorse the sentiments expressed in the note of our government sent to the pontiff, on August 27, as giving to the world the true interpretation of the purposes of the United States in this war. We admire your lofty, high minded attitude through the great trials to which you as our president have been subjected during the present day world conflict."

GETS LEGACY HELD IN TRUST FOR 111 YEARS

Cedar Falls, Ia., Sept. 1.—Notified that he was soon to receive a fortune left to him by a great uncle that died nearly a century before the beneficiary was born, H. H. Hamilton aged 20 employed in a local bakery, jumped from comparative poverty into a fortune of $50,000 this week. He left yesterday for Philadelphia, where he is to receive his legacy at the official division of his ancestor's estate early in October.

Hamilton is an orphan. The legacy came to him as a complete surprise. When a small boy, he had heard his parents tell of a bequest left in trust by his great uncle, to be divided among the man's living heirs at the expiration of 99 years, but never expected to participate in the distribution. He had even forgotten the great uncle's name until he received a letter from the Philadelphia concern having the money in trust, notifying him of the coming settlement of the century old estate.

This great uncle died in Pennsylvania in 1806. He left a fortune of $190,000 in trust to be divided among his heirs at the end of 99 years. His heirs now are many—so many that Hamilton cannot remember one-tenth of them. The fortune of $190,000 has increased to something like $2,000,000, as Hamilton's share is said to be but 1-40th of that amount.

WHITING—E. A. Smith has purchased the Rust brick block here, which is occupied by the Schurdevin pharmacy. This building was built about 10 years ago by the late Dr. Rust and is one of the finest buildings in town. The second story is occupied by offices.

SHENANDOAH—Four hundred and seventy-three dollars and sixty cents for one load of Tamworth bred hogs was the price paid J. M. Darby, of Northboro.

MARCUS—Five cattle were thrown into an old well on the Eugene Weber farm, near Marcus when the walls caved in and four of them were drowned.

CLAIMED IOWA MINES WILL HAVE TO CLOSE

Operators Declare They Cannot Produce Coal for Government Price.

Des Moines, Ia., Aug. 31.—District prices on coal instead of a blanket price for the entire state and country will be asked by Gov. W. L. Harding when the governors of the coal mining states meet in Washington, D. C., in the near future.

Coal operators from Webster and Boone counties conferred with the governor this morning and asked that district prices be fixed, so that working conditions could be taken into consideration by those who will make the wholesale prices.

Governor Harding was unable to state the date of the meeting at Washington.

Mines in northern Iowa will be compelled to close indefinitely, say the operators, if the present blanket prices are not changed. A different system of mining is used in the northern section of the state and causes increased overhead expense. The operators claim the southern Iowa miners are more able to meet the new price.

The government price is $2.90, whereas the operators say it costs them $2.60 per ton to get the coal to the top of the shaft.

LEMARS PUBLIC SCHOOLS TO HAVE 13 NEW TEACHERS

LeMars, Ia., Aug. 31.—Thirteen new instructors have been engaged for the coming term of the LeMars public schools, which open September 4, according to the list given out today by S. T. BEGIN IOWA CAMPAIGN FOR BIGGER WHEAT CROP

Ames, Ia., Aug. 31.—Twelve special representatives of the United States department of agriculture are being sent into the southern half of Iowa counties this week to undertake a six weeks' campaign for an increased winter wheat crop to be planted this fall. These men will secure lists of farmers who have seed wheat to sell and of those who need to buy seed. Then they will endeavor to bring the two together.

These men will work in the various counties in cooperation with the chairman and members of the county councils of national defense. They are being sent out by the federal government at the request of the national council of defense as part of the national increased wheat acreage program. Gov. W. L. Harding has written a letter to the members of the county defense boards, asking them to aid in discovering the needs of farmers in regard to seed wheat.

THREE YOUNG WOMEN ARE HELD FOR DUBUQUE CRIME

Dubuque, Ia., Aug. 31.—Three Dubuque young women, Marie and Laura Street and Frances Crabtree, were arrested late Saturday and are still being held for investigation in connection with the murder early last week of Albert Zenft and Frank Wolters at a cottage a short distance below East Dubuque, Ill. The ages of the girls range from 17 to 21.

The girls tell of having visited the cottage occupied by the murdered men, visited there frequently, but deny all knowledge of the events that transpired there on the night of the tragedy. The officers believe they know more about the matter than they are telling, believe that they know who committed the crime though they may not have been there at the time it was committed. For that reason and in order to prepare for other developments the girls have been given five-day sentences for vagrancy.

PLYMOUTH COUNTY BOARD ASKS 13 BE EXEMPTED

LeMars, Ia., Aug. 31.—Setting forth that if there is to be uniformity in the selective draft, a number of men whose claims for exemption on grounds of dependents were disallowed by the Plymouth county exemption board, should be excused from service, the members of the local board have petitioned the district board to reverse the decision of the local board and grant the exemption claims of 13 Plymouth county men, and as many more as the district board deems proper. Members of the local board said that they took the action they did in fairness to the heads of Plymouth county families. They explained that they allowed exemption claims on grounds of dependents only in cases where actual want might have resulted, while neighboring exemption boards had made it a practice to allow claims in cases where either the registrant or the dependents were not personally possessed of sufficient means to support the dependents. The action of the local board in petitioning the district board to excuse from service 13 men whose exemption claims were disallowed by the local board was concurred in by Nelson Miller, government challenger.

Davenport, Ia., Aug. 31.—The sorest man in Iowa! Wilhelm Glunz. That's he!

CHEROKEE VETERAN DIES; PASTOR HAS CLOSE CALL

Cherokee, Ia., Aug. 30.—After a long and painful illness M. M. Crawford passed away at his home in this city Sunday evening. The deceased was a veteran of the civil war and a member of Custer post, G. A. R.

Just at the busy and congested time at the main street crossing last evening a large crowd of people were attracted by a mishap which befell Father Desmond, who was driving alone in his sedan, and was going east over the tracks. The yard men were switching passenger coaches, and just as Rev. Mr. Desmond got on the track the rear end of a coach loomed up against him. He had control of his car and got it stopped in time so that the coach struck the front end of it and shoved it around on the tracks a few feet.

Will O'Neill, driving in Tilden township, had a close call when his Ford turned turtle with im. He was pinned under the machine but managed to extricate himself. He escaped with nothing more serious than severe bruises, and his car was only slightly damaged.

A bunch of five Cherokee men left Saturday for Fort Snelling training camp. They were Guy M. Gillette, Geo. E. Wilson, R. D. Campbell and Frank Johnson. Rev. Japtha Sealay was unable to go on the morning train, but he left in the evening.

OLIVE BURNETT, 7 YEARS OLD, PREVENTS BAD FIRE

Sioux Rapids, Ia. Aug. 30.—What might have been a disastrous fire yesterday at this place was averted by the presence of mind of Olive Burnett, a 7-year-old girl. One of the employes of the electric light plant, cut one of the wires, and the end of the wire dropped on the roof of a barn in the back alley, where there is a cluster of frame buildings.

The little girl noticed a tiny flame shoot out of the roof. She ran and gave the alarm and in a short time the fire was extinguished without damage, except a small hole burned in the roof of the building.

Marshalltown, Ia., Aug. 30.—One negro is dead, a negress is badly wounded, and their alleged assailant, also colored, is in jail charged with murder, as the result of a cutting affray at Ackley, Hardin county. W. M. Brown, aged 33, is charged with the crime, which is said to have been prompted by jealousy. Brown is charged with resenting the alleged attentions paid Mrs. Brown by A. Watson, and cut both his wife and the negro badly. Watson died of his wounds and Mrs. Brown is in a critical condition.

CHEAPER AIRPLANES AND SUPPLY ASSURED

Washington, D. C., Aug. 28.—Manufacture of aircraft in great numbers under the aircraft production board, it was learned today, has reduced the cost of airplanes one half, with the probability that the cost price to the government eventually will be about one-third of the normal cost of the machines before the plans of the board were carried out.

In addition, it was stated authoritatively that satisfactory progress was being made with construction actually insuring not only a continuous supply of machines now being turned out, but also prompt delivery of the fighting types early next year.

Mr Fairweather refused to answer the mayor's charges, but says he will do so in a special statement tomorrow.

BRITISH SHIFT ATTACK TO GAZA

Advance on Front of 800 Yards —Big Guns Bellow Out Warning of New Drive.

London Sept 1 The British forces in Palestine attacked last night south west of Gaza on a front of 800 yards, it is announced officially The line was advanced

Rome, Sept 1 Heavy fighting continues on the Bainsizza and Carso plateaus The war office reports advantages were gained on Monte San Gabrille and in the Brestovizza valley and that 636 more prisoners were taken

By the United Press

London Sept. 1 - The fearful fighting of the Flanders offensive cost England 60 373 in killed, wounded and missing, according to compilations announced today

This is below that of last month, which was 71,000 but the loss of officers was higher this month In July, loss in officers was 2 426 In August this jumped to 5,480

By Associated Press.

None of the three big campaigns now in progress on western fronts seems again to have got into full swing General Cadorna, whose great drive for Trieste is perhaps the most spectacular of the current operations, is displaying an activity more pronounced than either General Petain or General Haig in their respective fields at Verdun and in the Arras-Flanders areas. Even the Italian commander, however, apparently is in the midst of one of the pauses characteristic of virtually all the great drives against strongly fortified positions in this war

Big Guns Busy Again.

On the front below Lens, General Haig reports the repulse of a German raid on the British lines five miles southeast of the city No mention is made of the activities on the British side, but London war office intimations are that the artillery battle is being carried on in virtually continuous form in preparation for the next forward thrust with every indication that the wearing down process is having its due effect on the Germans

General Petain's report indicates the possibility of a speedy renewal of the infantry battle at Verdun The artillery on both sides of the Meuse is actively bombarding the German lines The Germans have shown some activity in Alsace making an attack near Hartmanna's weiler kopf, which the French repulsed completely

British Casualties Decrease

Although the British armies on the Franco Belgian front were engaged in much notably heavy fighting during August, including the great attack of the Anglo-French forces in Flanders the casualties were notably less than during July The British figures for August given by London total 59,811, as compared with 71 832 for July, a falling off of more than 12,000 The casualties indeed have been on a descending scale during the entire period since the active campaigning season opened, the high mark being set in the May figures which totalled 112,233

THE GERMAN REPORT.

Berlin, Sept 1 —(via London.) — Operations undertaken by the Russians yesterday at Narocz lake, 60 miles south of Dvinsk resulted unsuccessfully for them, says today's official report from the eastern front

A portion of the ground recently gained by the British south of Lecatelet has been recaptured by the Germans

SHELDON CHOSEN U. S. FOOD HEAD IN BRITAIN

London Sept 1.—Louis P Sheldon, who is associated with a London banking firm, has been asked by Herbert C Hoover, to accept appointment as representative of the American food administration board in the United Kingdom. It is understood, Mr Sheldon who is a Yale graduate, has accepted and that it is now being determined whether he shall become an attache of the American embassy

As Mr Hoover's representative, Mr. Sheldon will deal with the British food controller for the purpose of bringing about close cooperation between the United States and England in regard to the control of food

ENGLISH JEWS KICK ON HEBREW REQUIREMENTS

London, Aug. 31.—A deputation of prominent English Jews headed by Lord Swaythling, visited the earl of Derby, secretary of war yesterday, says the Daily Mail, and urged the abandonment of the title "Jewish regiment", which had been adopted for the new Hebrew regiment recently organized. The deputation pleaded that 40,000 Jews now serving in the army were fighting not as Jews, but as British subjects and wished to continue to do so. Lord Derby agreed to the abandonment of the title and promised to give the regiment a new designation.

FRENCH REPULSE GERMANS.

Paris, Aug. 31.—"East of Cerny a German patrol which attempted to approach our lines, was repulsed by our fire, says today's statement.

"There was active artillery fighting on both banks of the Meuse. In Alsace an enemy attack south of Hartmann's weiler kopf was repulsed completely. There is nothing to report from the remainder of the front."

KAISER RAPPED; GIVEN MONTH TO ORDER REFORMS

If Demands Are Not Complied With, Majority in Reichstag Will Act, Government Is Notified.

ASK FREEDOM OF PRESS

Emperor's Utterances Attacked and Responsibility Placed on Chancellor in Harsh Criticism

By Associated Press

Copenhagen Sept 1 A warning that unless the German government heeds demands of the reichstag for reforms the majority parties will take measures was given before the reichstag main committee on Wednesday. Resolutions of the majority introduced by Dr Karl Heine socialist, demanded for the fourth or fifth time abolition of the political censorship and limitation of the military censorship to facts connected with the conduct of the war and criticism thereof This was held to be necessary because it is notorious that the military authorities exercise a sweeping political censorship of the German press on the pretense that publications of a political nature may affect the military spirit of the people

Gives Kaiser Four Weeks

Dr Heine gave the government four weeks, until the assembling of the reichstag to mend its ways Otherwise he said the reichstag majority would be forced to take steps The government has received some half dozen earlier warnings of a similar nature and its response in the present instance will not be an unfair test of the influence of the present majority in the reichstag.

Speeches and pronouncements of Emperor William were criticized in the debate on the censorship Mathias Erzberger, centrist leader and Dr. Heine called attention to the effect caused by the emperor's impulsive statements which sometimes run counter to the ostensible policy of the government

Kaiser's Outbreaks Criticized

Although not mentioned in the censored accounts of the committee's proceedings, the emperor's critics probably had particularly in mind his recent utterances in regard to England which he pointed out as Germany's arch enemy which must be defeated at any cost

Dr Heine appears to have demanded freedom for the press to discuss such utterances of the emperor Herr Erzberger asked whether Chancellor Michaelis assumed responsibility for what was said by the emperor Foreign Secretary von Keuhlmann replied that the representative at great headquarters of the foreign office was informed concerning the speeches and that the chancellor assumed responsibility

"Denials" Cause Attack.

As had been expected, the misleading denials" by the foreign office of Premier Kerensky's statement that a separate peace offer had been made recently to Russia and of the message said by former Ambassador Gerard to have been sent by Emperor William to President Wilson at the outbreak of the war were brought up for criticism Herr Erzberger said the official communications were coming into wide discredit abroad, owing to the many self evident contradictions in them

TACKLE BREAD AND BREAD PRICES NEXT

Hoover Expected to Act—Hull Says Farmers Will Hold Their Wheat.

Washington Sept. 1—Former Representative John T Hull, of Iowa, said today he doubted whether many of the northwestern farmers would ship their wheat at $2, and looked for them to hold it.

"I can't see why the government should regulate wheat and not regulate cotton and steel," said Mr. Hull.

Protests from some farming sections against the wheat price are expected, but are likely to be disregarded Flour and bread prices will be tackled next.

FARMERS CAN MAKE MONEY--JOHNSON

South Dakota Senator Says Regulation Should Be Extended to Bread and Feed.

Washington, D. C., Sept 1.—With wheat prices fixed by the government, the food administration must now see to it that prices of flour and bread and likewise prices of feeds are reduced and the public given relief. This was the declaration of Senator Johnson, of South Dakota, today. He said he was satisfied with the wheat price fixed by the government and that farmers could make money on wheat at this price.

Sterling Dissapointed.

"Disappointing," was the comment of Senator Sterling in the government wheat price. "I hoped it would be put at $2.50. I do not believe with proper regulation of flour and bread prices, that wheat at $2.50 would work hardships."

RUSS EXPECT TO GET BIG LOAN FROM U. S.

Petrograd, Sept. 1. — The Bourse Gazette says it has reason to believe that the favorable disposition manifested by Americans, particularly after the national conference at Moscow, will enable the provisional government soon to obtain from the United States a loan of 5,000,000,000 rubles.

KILLS CHILD LABOR LAW

Government Will Appeal to Secure Decision This Fall and Officials Expect a Victory.

Greensboro, N C., Sept. 1.—Federal Judge James E. Boyd today declared the Keating-Owen child labor law unconstitutional.

GOVERNMENT WILL FIGHT.

Washington, Sept. 1.—The government will at once appeal the decision of Judge Boyd, holding the federal child labor law unconstitutional. It probably will be expedited to get it before the supreme court at the coming fall term.

In as much as a contest was to be expected officials are not concerned over the decision by a lower court as it serves as the vehicle for appeal and speedy determination of the question before the highest court in the land. Department of justice officials have no doubt of the constitutionality of the law and are confident that many decisions of the supreme court point to a victory for the government.

GUARD AGAINST FRIGHTFULNESS

U. S. Agents Make Many Arrests of Boche Apostles to Keep Them From Trying "Terribleness" Here.

By the United Press.

Washington, Sept. 1.—Government sleuths are watching for evidence of Teutonic frightfulness among the kaiser's spies in all parts of the country, it was learned today.

The government knows there are plenty of Boche apostles scattered through the United States who would be delighted with a chance to feed children poisoned candy, sprinkle poison in wells and reservoirs, and do other things of the sort

Every effort is being made to "spot" these pleasant creatures. Many of them have been arrested quietly.

So anxious were the kaiser's agents to poison children in Rumania that they flew over that land in airplanes and dropped sacks of poisoned candy, which the children ate, and within 24 hours died in agony from the effects of the tainted sweets.

The government wants to control this situation and at the same time avoid engendering suspicion and hatred of loyal Germans among the country's citizens. In announcing that it had found tetanus germs in samples of court plaster distributed by anonymous peddlers in various parts of the United States, the department of justice prefaced its statement by saying that it did not "share in any sensational view as to the manner in which the court plaster became infected."

"But," added, "the public is cautioned against purchasing this remedy except from approved sources, the warning being particularly directed against purchases in small packages from street peddlers and venders."

DEPOSED EMPEROR, ESCAPED, RECAPTURED

London, Aug. 31.—Lidj Jeasu, the deposed emperor of Abyssinia, who escaped from Magdala, has been captured, according to a dispatch to the Daily Mail, from Jibuti, French Somaliland.

Lidj is a grandson of the late King Menelik, who he succeeded in 1912. He was dethroned in 1916 by his aunt. A London dispatch of August 26 reported that the deposed emperor and his followers had defeated 300 of the government forces who had been trying to capture him for six months.

ONCE AMERICANS NOW AID KAISER

Others in Germany When War Began Forced Into Army —Two More Americans Are Freed.

Washington, Sept. 1—Persistent efforts of the state department to secure the release from Belgium of two Americans, C. C. Clayton, of the Western Electric company, and —— Whipple, of the Bell Telephone company, have been successful, according to a report to the department today from The Hague.

The men have arrived there from Antwerp where they have been detained by the Germans since the first days of the war between the United States and Germany Their case was similar to many others, the German government refusing to issue passports.

Germany never replied to the representations, but information since received by the department indicated that almost all Americans, other than those of German birth or ancestry, had left the country.

Among those still in Germany, however, are many who are known to have been forced into military service on the ground that Germany regards their naturalization in the United States as invalid and still holds that they are German citizens. It also has developed that several of those who had taken out citizenship papers in the United States voluntarily reassumed their obligations as native born Germans.

RUSS LEADERS SEE HOPE IN CONFERENCE

Moscow, Aug. 31.—A spirit of confidence in the ultimate benefit to accrue from the national conference held here is expressed by representatives of the various groups which participated. Their hopes are based on no definite policies enunciated or measures adopted, but upon the spirit of conciliation observed among the factions and a clearer understanding growing out of the discussion of the governmental problems.

Prof. Paul Milukoff, spokesman of the constitutional democrats, expressed skepticism as to the permanent benefit to be derived.

ARMY WAY OF ENDING HIGH PRICES HITS PARIS

Paris, Aug. 31.—An order made its appearance yesterday on the bulletin boards of American Red Cross hospital No. 1, at Neuilly, formerly the Drivers ambulance, in which American ambulance drivers were strictly forbidden to pull Paris cabmen or chauffeurs off their boxes and themselves operate the cabs and taxicabs.

Some Americans missed the last underground train to the hospital and hunted up a taxicab whose driver, however, demanded a fare of $4, or about four times the ordinary rate. When he proved not amenable to argument for a reduction and no policeman could be found to enforce the regulations, the ambulance drivers seized him, placed him gently but firmly against a lamp post, mounted the taxicab and drove home, deserting the machine near the hospital.

The police found the car early the next morning and opened investigation, but the inquiry proved fruitless.

BOY ACCIDENTALLY SHOT BY PLAYMATE

Delbert Wellman, of Piedmont, S. D., Killed by Little David Groff.

Sturgis, S. D., Sept. 1.—Delbert Wellman, 13-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. H. H. Wellman, of Piedmont, S D., was accidentally shot and killed Thursday afternoon by a young playmate, David Groff, 9 years old, while playing with a 22-caliber rifle.

The accident took place at the Groff home in Piedmont at 3 p. m. An attempt was made to take the boy to Sturgis in an automobile, but he died on the way at 5 p. m.

The gun was discharged accidentally. The boys didn't know that it was loaded. The bullet passed through one of the lungs of the Wellman boy. The boy was an exceedingly kind and popular boy.

Funeral services will be held Saturday morning at Piedmont church by Rev. C. D. Erskine, of Sturgis. The body will be taken on the noon train to Lead City for burial. Parents of both the children are grief stricken.

LABOR SHORTAGE HOLDS SOLDIERS

Men Under Arms Apparently Fit. Mentally and Physically, for Any Tasks Ahead of Them.

By the United Press.

On the Line of Communication of the American Army in France, Sept. 1.—The army behind the American fighting army needs men and supplies. It is tackling a stupendous job of supplying the fighting force with scanty reserves. With a trip along the line of communication completed, the most frequent comment of army men is "some one is asleep at home."

"The army needs laborers, particularly carpenters and joiners, and vast supplies of all descriptions. Now is the time to send them, when transportation of troops is not occupying the bulk of the tonnage," men say.

Organization Merely Outline.

After six months of war, the rear organization of the army is a mere frame work. The United Press correspondent has been living with the American troops for a month in their training camp. The men are physically and mentally almost ready for field service, but a tour of the bases gives the impression that the rear organization is far behind their combatant brothers.

For instance, the bakery is of makeshift appearance. There are a couple of rows of field ovens. The bakers lived in tents until recently. The piles of flour look imposing to a novice, but the towering flour sacks dwindle when the supplies which every army officer knows must be forthcoming, are drawn. A hard working reserve captain showed the writer one of the food magazines. The building, although of only fair size, was but partly filled.

French Women Do Work.

French female labor is doing stevedore work, trundling supplies, because of the shortage of American military labor. The medical base apparently is the only one which has profited to the fullest possible since the beginning of the war.

ENGAGEMENTS ANNOUNCED.

Toronto, Ont., Sept. 1.—Announcement of the engagement of Lady Maud Cavendish, the eldest daughter of the duke of Devonshire, governor general of Canada, to Capt. Angus MacKintosh, A. D. C., of the Royal Horse guards, was made here today. Captain MacKintosh, who is 32 years old, has been at Tidea hall for the last two years and was attached to the staff of the duke of Connaught. Lady Maud is 21 years old.

London, Sept. 1.—The engagement is announced of the Honorable Irene Molesworth, daughter of Viscount Molesworth, to Capt Charles Rowley, of the British Royal artillery, and a son of I. R. Capel Rowley, of New York. They will be married in London on October 14.

ANOTHER BANDIT CAPTURED.

Chicago, Sept. 1.—As a result of a pistol fight between 500 policemen and Edward Wheede, sought in connection with the murder and robbery on Tuesday of two express messengers, Detective George Clements, Terrence Kelley and William O'Neill were wounded and Wheede was captured, after holding the officers at bay for several hours from a cottage in which he was barricaded.

A search of the cottage revealed a sawed off shotgun and $1,100, supposed to be part of the $8,100 taken from the murdered messengers.

SELLS MORNING PAPER.

Cleveland, Ohio, Aug. 31.—The Cleveland company, publisher of the Cleveland Morning and Sunday Leader and afternoon News, has sold its six-day issue of the Morning Leader to the Cleveland Plain Dealer, effective September 1.

The Cleveland company will continue to publish the Sunday Leader and Cleveland News.

The Plain Dealer will announce tomorrow morning an increase to 2 cents on all transient sales.

FIND AUSTRIAN BUDGET DEFICIT.

Zurich, Aug. 31.—The Austrian budget for 1916 and 1917 shows a dificit of 344,000,000 crowns, compared with a deficit of 49,000,000 crowns in the preceding year. Two of the largest items of expenditure are 1,761,000,000 crowns for interest on war loans and 1,650,000,000 crowns for the support of soldiers' families. Special and direct war expenditures are not included in the budget.

TO PREVENT KNIGHTING GERARD

Washington, Aug. 31.—A bill that that would prevent Former Ambassador Gerard from accepting the Order of the Bath, with the honors of a Sir Knight, recently conferred by King George, was introduced today by Senator Overman and referred to the judiciary committee.

It would prohibit any citizen in the United States from accepting any present, emolument, office or title from any king or foreign government under penalty of a fine of $10,000 and forfeiture of citizenship

AMERICA'S CAUSE FOR WAR

"The new German policy swept every restriction aside. Vessels of every kind, whatever their flag, their character, their cargo, their destination, their errand, have been ruthlessly sent to the bottom without warning and without thought of help or mercy for those on board, the vessels of friendly neutrals along with those of belligerents. Even hospital ships and ships carrying relief to the sorely bereaved and stricken people of Belgium, though the latter were provided with safe conduct through the proscribed areas by the German Government itself and were distinguished by unmistakable marks of identity, have been sunk with the same reckless lack of compassion or of principle.* *

"I am not now thinking of the loss of property involved, immense and serious as that is, but only of the wanton and wholesale destruction of the lives of noncombatants, men, women and children, engaged in pursuits which have always, even in the darkest periods of modern history, been deemed innocent and legitimate. Property can be paid for; the lives of peaceful and innocent people can not be. The present German submarine warfare against commerce is a warfare against mankind."—Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States.

The station will be situated at the University. It will be independent, yet it will co-operate with and co-ordinate the work of the colleges of medicine, education, and dentistry, the departments of philosophy and psychology, sociology, home economics, the extension division, and the public health service. There will be a clinic in connection with the research station but a great deal of the work will be done in the homes of the children by members of the staff, or other specially qualified persons.

No Slipshod Methods

The subjects of the work will be normal children, children who are not defective in their mental or physical condition. They will be studied from the time of their birth until they pass out of childhood, but greatest stress will be laid in their development before they reach the age of seven, according to Doctor Baldwin. He has already achieved notable results in this type of work and the undertaking cannot be viewed as an experiment.

The research station will find by scientific methods just what conditions aid or hinder development in all of the phases of child life. Up to this time the work in this field has been sporadic and poorly arranged for the most part. Iowa's station will follow the individual child from year to year whereas the children in other places have been forgotten after one test, thereby eliminating the opportunity to note the development in the individual.

To Be of Public Service

There will be a close connection between the station at the University and all of the other agencies of the state interested in child welfare. A dissemination of the findings at the University's station and other authoritative information on the subject will be one of the features of the work. The station will also give professional training for child welfare workers, as a means of educating and helping the public.

THE GIRL FROM CUBA

By EARL REED SILVERS.

After Hal Griffiths had graduated without honors from the most exclusively select small college in the East, he entered the brokerage firm of Simms, Simms & Simms, in Wall street, and was given a desk in one of the inner offices. Every morning at ten o'clock he walked into the office, opened the desk, smoked a cigarette, looked out of the window for awhile and then went home. For this arduous labor he received a salary of $10,000 a year. If any of the trio of Simms could have followed his inclination he would have told Mr. Griffiths, gently but firmly, that as far as business was concerned, he was an excellent golf player, but as Hal's father had placed several hundred thousand dollars in the firm, Hal was left to his own peaceful pursuits.

These pursuits concerned chiefly golf in the summer and dancing in the winter. And so, possessed of many friends and much money, he was constantly in demand.

Occasionally these calls upon his time were rather irritating. He was one of those lovably blundering persons who did not know how to refuse an invitation, and so, when Charlotte Taylor suggested, with the hint of tears in her eyes, that he see her off when she left for Cuba, he assented smilingly but unhappily, and ordered two dozen roses to be sent to her stateroom.

On the morning of Charlotte's departure Hal waited in his office as long as he dared, and then took a taxi for the dock. Charlotte was waiting for him, and together they inspected the boat.

"I am going to sit here and think of you during the long evenings," she told him, indicating a shelter on the after deck, "and wonder if you will be thinking of me."

"I'll think of you every minute you are in my mind," he answered absently.

Then he stopped short. Passing across his line of vision was the prettiest girl he had ever seen. She wore a blue suit, white hat and white fox furs.

"Goodness!" he exclaimed involuntarily. "Who in the world is that girl?"

Charlotte's piquant face became suddenly resentful.

"I'm sure I don't know," she answered shortly. "Some Spaniard, probably."

"Spaniard nothing; she's an American."

The blast of the "All ashore!" whistle came. Hal said good-by just as quickly as he could and made his way to the gang plank. He stood on the pier and watched as the boat turned out into the river. Although he waved conscientiously to Charlotte, his gaze searched the ship for sight of the other girl. And just as he had given up hope, she appeared. The picture of her as she stood beside the rail, her face framed in the circle of hat and furs, was stamped indelibly on his memory.

The winter wore on, the same old endless round of social duties. But, somehow, Hal seemed to have lost interest; he even remained at the office all day and gave some attention to business, until the elder Simms' brother remarked to the younger one that maybe Harold Griffiths might be of some use to the firm, after all. Regularly, Hal received a six-page letter from Charlotte telling of the wonders of the climate. And then, just before the date when Charlotte was to sail for northern climes, Hal's telephone rang, and the softest voice he had ever heard asked him if Mr. Harold Griffiths was in. And having been assured that he was, the owner of the soft voice proceeded to tell him that she had just returned from Cuba, where she had the pleasure of meeting Miss Charlotte Taylor.

"Charlotte asked me to telephone you as soon as I reached New York," the stranger continued, "and to tell you that she was having a lovely time and will be home on the first of May."

"That's mighty nice of you," Hal answered pleasantly. "Did you see much of Charlotte?"

"Oh, yes," the voice answered. "We went down on the same boat and stayed at the same hotel."

Hal's heart missed a beat. He asked abruptly: "Where are you now?"

"At the Plaza."

"Do you mind if I drop up to see you for a few minutes? I am terribly interested in Cuba."

For a moment there was silence, and then the voice answered: "No, I don't mind if you do."

So Hal rushed out of the office and hailed a passing taxi. As he rushed into the lobby of the Plaza, the girl with the white furs arose to meet him. And then time flew so fast that it was 1:30 before either of them realized it; so they took lunch together and each told the other the history of his and her life. And after the girl with the white furs had found out that Hal was not engaged to Charlotte or to anyone else, she told him that he might come to see her the next evening.

So Hal, with feigned interest in Cuba and unfeigned interest in at least one Cuban tourist, accepted the invitation and talked, not about the winter in Cuba, but the summer in the United States.

And then, tucked away in the society columns of the New York papers, there appeared one morning the following notice: "The engagement is announced of Harold Griffiths to Miss Lois Browning"—which was the name of the girl from Cuba.

The Marvelous Jack Rabbit.

Westerners assert that the jack rabbit may be found, happy and fat, spending the day under a scrap of bush that makes little more shade than a fishnet. His skin is as porous as a piece of buckskin, and the heat is sufficient to evaporate every drop of blood in his body, yet he seems to get on very nicely.

BAD ROOFING FIRE DANGER

Investigation Into Causes of Big Atlanta Conflagration Lays Blame on General Use of Shingles.

Following the Atlanta conflagration of May 21, 1917, the committee on fire prevention of the national board of fire underwriters dispatched one of its most experienced engineers to the stricken city in order to make a close study of the characteristics of the fire, the causes to which it was due and the lessons which might be deduced from it.

The report finds that the Atlanta disaster was essentially a "shingle-roof" conflagration of the familiar type; it questions the utility of the dynamiting of buildings and records the fact that some of the hose sent from nearby cities could not be used through lack of standardized couplings.

The report's greatest emphasis, however, is laid upon bad roofing conditions, which are summed up in the following statement:

This conflagration, together with two of the other fires occurring at the same time, emphasizes the ease with which spreading fires may develop in cities where wooden shingle roofs predominate, even when the fire department is mainly well equipped and manned. It illustrates the startling suddenness with which such a fire may grow into a conflagration under favorable conditions.

TREES NEED PLENTY OF ROOM

Should Be Planted Far Enough Apart For Them to Become Perfectly Developed Specimens.

If you own your place the first thing you wish to do is to plant trees and shrubs, because these take years to mature, and naturally you do not want to lose a year. They are the only permanent elements in the garden and they cost more in the first place than seeds, bulbs or perennials. Therefore, here is your great chance to make a success or to spoil the effect of your place and waste a lot of money. Here are some good rules:

Save money by planting your avenue trees far enough apart for them to become perfect specimens. Nearly everybody plants too close. Measure the spread of the best specimens in town of the species you want. Try to get all the people in your block to plant the same kind of tree. Don't plant silver maples, box elders or Carolina poplars. Their beauty is short lived. The elm is the quickest growing of the long-lived avenue trees.

Save money by not planting a useless hedge across your front yard. A hedge is never cheaper than a fence, nor can you expect it to be as effective in keeping out animals. A tall, thorny hedge, like osage orange, is a bad thing for a suburban place.

Reducing Fire Hazard.

It is of the utmost consequence that every individual in the United States consider himself a committee of one to co-operate in the removal of all unnecessary fire hazards that may come within his knowledge. The urgency of this cannot by any possibility be exaggerated, says the Scientific American. The difference between adequate attention to this warning by every resident of our country, and its complete neglect by all concerned, might very well be the difference between winning the war and losing it. And while of course this figure is an overdrawn one in the sense that certainly everybody will not ignore the warning any more than everybody will heed it, this fact does not in any degree diminish the measure of individual responsibility. Everyone of us can contribute something to the lessening of the fire loss for the year to come.

Business Men Educate City.

The chamber of commerce of York, Pa., believes that its main function is to educate the people of York to the need of better things. It is at present devoting its educational efforts to the children, because "the child of today is the man of tomorrow." An information folder has been issued by the chamber which shows how the work is being done. Prominent business men have been asked to make ten-minute addresses on civic topics in every school building in the city of York and its suburbs. The folder contains suggestions for talks, and gives a list of the business and professional men who have consented to co-operate in the movement this year. The first work of this character was attempted in 1915, when 34 men gave their services. In 1916 there were 53 volunteers, and 109 men are assisting this year.

A Domestic Indignation.

"I just can't get along with my husband, and that's all there is to it," remarked the square-jawed woman.

"I understand you begged him with tears in your eyes not to go into the army if he could possibly avoid it."

"I did talk rather sentimentally about the fear of losing him. And he made my affection an excuse to put up such an argument for exemption that they'll probably let him out. I've got to look forward to having a slacker sitting around the house all through the war!"—Washington Star.

PAINS SHARP AND STABBING

Woman Thought She Would Die. Cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Ogdensburg, Wis.—"I suffered from female troubles which caused piercing pains like a knife through my back and side. I finally lost all my strength so I had to go to bed. The doctor advised an operation but I would not listen to it. I thought of what I had read about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and tried it. The first bottle brought great relief and six bottles have entirely cured me. All women who have female trouble of any kind should try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound."—Mrs. ETTA DORION, Ogdensburg, Wis.

Physicians undoubtedly did their best, battled with this case steadily and could do no more, but often the most scientific treatment is surpassed by the medicinal properties of the good old fashioned roots and herbs contained in Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

If any complication exists it pays to write the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass., for special free advice.

ALL SENSATIONS IN BRAIN

Persons Make a Mistake When They Say They Feel Pain in Other Portions of the Body.

Where do you feel the pain? asks the doctor. In my finger, in my ear, in my foot, the sufferer replies, and if the physician told him he did not feel it there but in his head, the average man would doubt the doctor's sanity Yet the doctor would be right.

In an address at the University of California, Prof G. H Parker of Harvard told the students that we have been obliged to give up the idea that sensations are spread throughout our bodies, for persons who have lost a limb often feel sensations that seem to come from the missing member

"Our sensations,' said Professor Parker "are not located in the peripheral parts affected, but in the central nervous system and within that portion of it known as the cerebral cortex" This is the outer layer or gray matter of the brain. One may lose an arm, yet have the sensation of pain in the hand but if a small piece of that particular part of the brain to which run the sensory nerves from the arm be removed one will never again feel anything in that arm, not even if the hand be placed in the fire

Twins?

"He isn't the slim one, or the one who has whiskers," the first youngster was saying "He doesn't wear glasses either"

Oh that must be Mr Jones, answered the other

"Who does Mr Jones look like?" demanded the first boy

Well," responded the one questioned, "he looks a lot like Mr Smith. Yep, he does I think they must be brothers."

POSTUM

"There's a Reason"

The DESTROYER

By BURTON E. STEVENSON

(CHAPTER ELEVEN—Continued.)

He told himself this deliberately, after a glance at his neighbors; and then, in the next moment, he called himself a cad, for every human being is interesting, once you get below the skin. But degrees of interest vary, and Dan felt that he had never met any one who promised so much at this outspoken girl, with the shining eyes and sensitive mouth. Which boat was she sailing by, he wondered? It was an even chance that, like himself, she would be on the Ottilie. Yes—but second class? That would be asking too much of Fortune! Let it be added here that Dan was returning in the second cabin not because — as he was to hear so many times on that voyage!—there was no room in the first, but because by doing so, he had saved the money for an extra week of travel.

He found more arrivals in the office when he left the table, and a formidable array of baggage, which was presently loaded on vans and trundled away toward the waiting tender. He paid his bill, collected the two suit cases which constituted his total impedimenta, saw them safely off for the pier, tipped the porter, and left the hotel. The whistle of the tender was blowing shrilly, and, when he reached the pier, he saw far out at sea the smudge of smoke against the sky, which told that one of the steamers was approaching. He boarded the tender, assured a medical inspector that he was an American citizen and so did not need to have his eyes examined, dug his suit cases out of the pile of luggage, and found himself a seat near the bow of the boat. Presently the special boat train rolled in along the pier and disgorged the final quota of passengers.

Ten minutes later, with a shrill toot, the tender backed away and headed out across the harbor. With a queer feeling half of sorrow, half of joy, Dan looked back at the receding shore, telling himself that the next soil his feet touched would be that of America

A mile out, the great liner lay waiting, impressively huge as seen from the deck of the little tender, and presently they were alongside and filing through an open port. A steward grabbed his suit cases, the instant he was on board, asked the number of his room, led him to it along interminable passages, and left him to make himself at home.

There were two berths in it, and, as he had paid for only one of them, he knew that, at this crowded season, he could scarcely hope to have the whole room to himself. But there was as yet no sign of any other occupant, so Dan, thrusting his bags under the lower berth, went on deck again. The last of the baggage and mail was being lifted aboard by a block and tackle, worked by a donkey engine, and even as Dan looked, the tender tooted its whistle, cast loose, and backed away, and suddenly beneath his feet Dan felt the quiver which told that the screws had started. Slowly the great ship swung around and headed away into the west toward the setting sun—and toward "the land of freedom." How that phrase was running in his head!

He made a little tour of that portion of the boat set aside for passengers of the second class, and realized that the frugal Germans were much less generous in their provision for those humble ones than was the English line on which he had come to Europe. There the second class was well amidships, with a deck room almost equal to that given the aristocrats at the bow. Here the second class was at the very stern, and the deck-room was limited indeed. Of course, Dan told himself, the Ottilie was a crack boat, designed to cater to the most exclusive trade; but he looked forward at the long stretches set apart for the first cabin with a little envy.

The boat was crowded, but he saw nothing of the black haired girl, and finally, after finding that there was no hope of getting a deck chair, he sought the dining room steward, got his table ticket, and made his way back to his stateroom. But on the threshold he paused. A man was lying in the upper berth, the light at his head turned on and a paper in his hand. He raised his head and looked down, at the sound of the door, and Dad had the impression of a bronzed countenance lighted by a pair of very brilliant eyes.

"Ah," said a pleasant voice, "so this is my shipmate," and the stranger swung his legs over the side of the berth and dropped lightly to the floor. Again Dan had the impression of the bright eyes upon him.

"It looks that way," he said. And then a sudden compunction seized him. "I didn't mean to be a pig and take the lower berth. You are quite welcome to it."

"Oh, no, no," protested the other. "The choice is always to the first comer. That is the rule of the sea."

Dan noticed that, though he spoke English well, it was with the clipped accent which betrayed the Frenchman.

"Then I choose the upper one," he said laughing.

The other shrugged his shoulders.

"I can but thank you," he said. "After all, you are younger than I. My name is Andre Chevrial, very much at your service," and he held out his hand.

If he had announced himself to be a prince of the blood, Dan would not have been surprised, for there was that in his bearing which bespoke the finished gentleman, and a magnetism in his manner to which Dan was already yielding.

"Mine is Webster—Dan Webster," he said, and took the outstretched hanb warmly.

M Chevrial looked a little puzzled.

"The name seems somehow familiar," he said; "but I cannot quite place it."

Dan laughed.

"My father made the mistake of naming me after the great Daniel 100 years after," he explained.

"Oh, so that is it! Daniel—Daniel Webster. A statesman, was he not?"

"One of our greatest."

"Though it did not need that to tell me you are an American. You of America have an atmosphere all your own Shall we go on deck and have a cigaret?"

So presently Dan found himself seated besire M Chevrial, talking very comfortably. The Frenchman, to Dan's surprise, proclaimed himself to be nothing more important than a wine jobber who visited America every autumn to dispose of his wares; but, whatever his business, he was certainly a most entertaining companion. And then, suddenly, Dan quite forgot him, for coming toward them down the deck was the dark eyed girl, arm in arm with a man whose burning eyes strangely belied his snowy hair. Dan sat staring at them, scarcely able to credit such stupendous good fortune, and, as they passed, the girl looked at him, smiled and nodded.

M. Chevrial, whom no detail of this little scene had escaped lighted another cigaret.

"A very striking looking young lady," he said. "The gentleman, I take it, is her father?"

"Yes, I think so," said Dan. "I met her for a moment on the beach at Cherbourg this morning, and she mentioned that she was with her father."

"Ah!" commented Chevrial, "And now tell me more about this journalism of yours, of which we hear so much. Is it really free? Is it not true that most of your papers are controlled by wealthy syndicates, who use them for their own purposes?"

This was a red flag to the bull, and Dan plunged into a defense of American journalism, citing instances and proofs, telling of incidents in his own experience showing that most editors really have consciences by which they are guided, and a high conception of their duty to the public.

"There are exceptions, of course," Dan went on, carried away by his subject; "there are scoundrels in the newspaper business, just as in all businesses; but it is one of the beautiful laws of compensation that, just as soon as a newspaper goes wrong, its influence begins to slip away from it * * *"

He stopped suddenly, for he had glanced at M. Chevrial and found him inattentive. His head was turned a little aside and his eyes were fixed with a peculiar and intent expression on two men who stood together by the rail, a little distance away. One of them was the man with the white hair. The other was evidently a tourist, from his costume, and though he was clean shaven, some instinct caused Dan to classify him as a German. He glanced back at Chevrial at last, but the latter was gazing dreamily out over the water and stifling a little yawn with his hand.

"Your pardon, M. Webster," he said. "But I arose very early this morning, in order to catch my train, and I am tired.. I think that I shall lie down for a few moments before dinner. Au revoir."

Dan sat on by himself for a little while; then it suddenly occurred to him that, if he looked about, he might find the dark eyed girl alone somewhere. He leaped to his feet and began the search. She was not on the promenade deck, nor in the library, and he had about decided that she had returned to her stateroom, when it occurred to him that she might be on the boat deck. So he climbed the narrow stair and emerged upon that lofty eyrie. No, she could not be here—it was too windy; then, as he glanced around, he saw, through the deepening twilight, a dark figure sitting on a bench in the lee of one of the boats.

Could it be she? He hesitated to approach near enough to be sure; but at last he mustered up courage to stroll past. And then, in an instant, his cap was off and his hand extended.

"I can't tell you how glad I am that you are on the boat!" he began. "May I sit down?"

"Certainly," and she moved a little, looking up at him, smiling. "I am glad, too."

"Are you? It's nice of you to say so, anyway. A voyage is so dull if there is no one to talk to. Of course, there is always some one to talk to—but I don't mean that kind of talk. I mean plumbing the depths—you know, that sort of thing."

"You think I can plumb the depths?"

"You certainly plumbed mine this morning. Not that I have any great depths," he added, laughing; "but your line touched bottom, and gave me a new feeling which I think was good for me. Now, since we're going to know each other, I want to introduce myself. My name is Webster—named after the real Daniel, but called Dan so that future historians can distinguish between us—and I earn a precarious living by chasing news for a New York paper."

"And my name," she responded instantly, "is Kasia Vard; and I have earned a precarious living in many ways -I have worked in factory, I have sold papers—I have even cleaned the streets."

"Cleaned the streets?" he repeated incredulously.

"Oh, that was not in America," she said. "It was at Warsaw. In Poland, just as in many other countries of Europe, the streets are cleaned by the women and children. The men, you see, are needed for the army."

There was a bitter irony in her voice which drew him closer.

"I have seen women and children working in the fields; in Holland I saw them helping tow the boats and working in the brickyards. That was bad enough. But I never have seen them cleaning the streets."

"Did you go to Munich?"

"No."

"You would have seen them doing it there—as they do it all over Germany. Had you gone to Chemnitz, you would have seen them carrying the hod."

She fell silent, and Dan leaned back, strangely moved. How young he was; how little he knew! Here was this girl, certainly not more than 20, who had lived more, felt more, thought more than he had ever done; who had ideals.

* * *

"Miss Vard," he said finally, in a low voice, "permit me to tell you something. I am just an average fellow with an average brain, who has gone about all his life with his eyes only half open—sometimes not even that. I have walked up and down Broadway, and fancied I was seeing life! I must seem awfully young to you—I feel a mere infant—intellectually, I mean. But I want to grow up—it isn't good for a man of 29 to be a mental Peter Pan. Will you help me?"

She smiled, the bright, sudden smile, which he had grown to like so much, and impulsively she held out her hand.

"Yes," she said, "I will help, as far as I can. The best thing I can do for you is to introduce you to my father. He can help far more than I!"

"Thank you," and he took her hand and held it. "It was your father I saw you with?"

"Yes. You will like him. He is the most wonderful man in the world. Now I must be going. He will be looking for me."

He went with her to the lower deck, then returned to the bench, and stared thoughtfully out over the dark sea. What a woman she was! And then he smiled a little as he recalled her last words, "The most wonderful man in the world!" He did not suspect that the time would come when he would echo them!

CHAPTER XII.

UNDER RUSSIAN RULE.

When Dan found his seat in the dining saloon, that evening, he glanced up and down the long table in the hope that Miss Vard and her father might be among his neighbors. But they were not, and it was not until he was half through the meal that he descried them at one of the tables on the other side of the room. At his own table there were the usual assorted types of the middle class tourists, his wife and family, most of them frankly glad that they were homeward bound, with the greatest part of their pilgrimage accomplished.

The sea was smooth and the great boat forged ahead with scarcely any motion, so that every seat was occupied and every one in good spirits. There was a hum of talk and rattle of dishes; the white coated stewards scuttled back and forth, and the scene was as pleasant as the wholesale human consumption of food can ever be.

Dan went on with his dinner with one eye on the far table where Miss Vard and her father were seated; but his attention was distracted for a time by a discussion with an Anglomaniac across the table started as to the relative merits of England and America, and to which he could not resist contributing a few remarks. When he glanced across the saloon again, he saw that Miss Vard and her father were no longer there. However, he finished his dinner with the comfortable consciousness that the second class quarters were limited, and that she could not escape from them except by jumping overboard; and when the meal was ended, he made his way leisurely through the lounge and along the decks in search of her. There were girls, girls everywhere, but not the one he sought; and finally, with a little smile, he mounted the ladder which led to the after boat deck.

Already other couples, scouting about the ship, had discovered the advantages of its dim seclusion, and most of the benches in the lee of the boats and about the little wireless house were occupied; but, on that one bench, in the shadow of the after life boat, Dan descried a solitary figure. He advanced without hesitation.

"I was hoping I should find you," he said.

She moved a little aside, as an invitation for him to share the bench.

"I like it up here," she said, "with no light but the stars, and that strange luminous glow along those wires up yonder."

Looking up, Dan saw that the gridiron of wires stretched between the masts was, indeed, faintly luminous against the sky.

"That's the wireless," he said. "Listen—you can hear it," and from the open window of the wireless house came the vicious snap and crackle of electricity. "The operator is sending a message."

She looked up again at the glowing wires.

"I think it the most wonderful thing in the world!" she said. "I can't understand it—I can't believe it—and yet, there it is!"

"Yes—and I suppose it has become an every day affair to the operator in there; it isn't wonderful to him any more. We forget how wonderful a lot of things are, when we get used to them."

"How wonderful everything is," she corrected; "the sunrise, the ocean * * *"

They sat for some time in silence, gazing out across the dark and restless water, touched here and there with white, as a wave combed and broke. Then Dan's gaze wondered to her face. Seen thus, in the dim light, framed by her dark hair, it, too, seemed wonderful to him; there was about it a mystic allusiveness, a subtle charm far more compelling than mere beauty ever is; her eyes had depths to them * * *

She felt his gaze upon her and turned her face to him and smiled.

"You may smoke, if you wish," she said. "I can feel that at the back of your mind."

THEN CAN NEARLY LOSES A PENN

An old tomato can, reposing [illegible] for reaches of the outfield, [illegible] near riot in a bush league out west, according to Billy Fox, veteran baseman, who wound up his career in the Western league.

"I was with a bush league team [illegible] years ago," declared Fox "and we were playing the game that was to decide the pennant. Our club had the other fellows whipped 2 to 2 when we started the ninth, and we breezed along in fine shape, getting the first two men out without any trouble.

"The third batter up was a big fellow and a long fly hitter so the fielder went back to camp for him But our fielder didn't go back far enough, the second ball pitched this big guy takes a toehold and there's a terrific crash. Away goes the ball, clear over the left fielder's head, and it looks as if they've got us tied sure The fielder raced for the ball, but after he picked it up we noticed he was tugging away at it between his knees

"In the meantime the batter, who is as slow as an ice wagon, was heading for second. We're yellin' for the left fielder to throw the ball in but he keeps on monkeying with it until he sees the batter putting into third

"Then we were all given the surprise of our lives. The fielder relays the tomato can to the shortstop, and dawned on us that the ball had been in it. By this time the batter is rounding third and the short stop makes the throw home as best he could. The catcher gets the can and puts it on the runner just as he's sliding into the plate, but the umpire calls him out, claiming he wasn't touched with the ball.

"Right here the thing happened that nearly caused a free-for-all fight. The catcher was a pretty slick article and didn't overlook any bets. He discovered that in sliding into the plate the runner had punctured the can with his spikes and ripped the ball. When he brought this to the umps he promptly called the runner out and we beat it for the clubhouse with the pennant cinched."

Who Are the Women Slackers.

From the New York Commercial.

Since the beginning of time women have loved brave men. In the words of the old song, "None but the brave deserve the fair." The cave man fought for his woman and the men who rule the world still do so. The literature of all ages is filled with tales of valor rewarded by the favors of fair women. This instinctive admiration for strength and courage has made the human race what it is

In New York city the marriage license bureau has been crowded for weeks with weaklings of both sexes desirous of entering the state of matrimony so that the men may escape military service by hiding behind the petticoats of their brides. These contemptible slackers do not dream of winning the love of women by brave deeds and these women do not spur their men forth to war in the good old way. Such people may succeed in life as long as some brave men survive to protect the rest, but the whole race will be subjugated by a stronger one when cowards predominate. The Chinese are a race of cowards, but they ceased to be soldiers centuries ago, and they can fully enjoy the blessings of peace and liberty

What is the natural and proper attitude of women towards this war and the men who fight that women may be saved from the outrages inflicted upon the sisters in Belgium and northern France Here is the answer of one of the great women of our day, Olive Schreiner, who thus describes the "new" woman:

"We are not new! If you would understand us, go back 2,000 years and study our descent; our breed is our explanation. We are the daughters of our fathers as well as our mothers. In our dreams we still hear the clash of the shields of our forebears as they struck them together before battle and raised the shout of "Freedom!" In our dreams it is with us still, and when we wake it breaks from our own lips. We are the daughters of these men."

That is the attitude of the mothers of free men. The miserable little creatures who crowd into the municipal building to save worthless men from going to war and put a premium on cowards and traitors are not real women. The man who hides behind a woman will live on a woman if he gets a chance Ask the police who are these slackers of military service, and they will tell you that from their ranks are recruited the "white slavers" and the "white slaves," or organized vice. They display cowardice that is one of the signs of perversion.

The evil does not end with refusal to fight. These perverts contaminate and destroy the young soldiers and sailors across whose path they throw themselves. The scum of New York sinks of iniquity has been churned to the surface around City Hall park by the drums of war and the stench sickens those who behold it.

It is reassuring to know that very few of these slackers are Americans. American boys still love adventure and dread of defending women instead of using them as shields. American women still give their loved ones to their country with Spartan fortitude. As for the slacker military service in contact with real men might regenerate some of them.

The Army Chaplain.

From the St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Very little about the army chaplain in this war has been written by correspondents, either at the front or behind it. Wherefore, one of them, who tells his own story, and is quoted by as credibl a correspondent as John L. Balderson, is worth hearing for his cause. Mr. Balderson describes him as "a man about 30, an athlete, cricketer and a football blue, if he were not young and in splendid trim he could never stand the racket at the front." But the story was told "on a road" billet some miles behind the lines," and the chaplain described the particular Sunday he was talking about as being a "normal Sunday." He had had two meetings at the front broken up by enemy shells. In attempting to conduct a third, at a field hospital, his doxology was pronounced by German airmen bombing the place. His conclusion was that chaplains should not be held to be noncombatants. "So far as I am concerned," he said, "a noncombatant is one who gets eternally shot at and is not allowed to shoot back."

We quite concur in his view that an army chaplain insisting upon holding services at the front while a battle is in progress should have the privilege of returning an enemy fire. The army chaplain can meet dangers enough and suffer hardships enough without violating discipline. The fortitude, and often the heroism, of these men is proverbial in armies. A chaplain, to an army, is the saving salt. Without the means of grace he offers fighting men would soon grow demoralized to the point of losing much of their efficiency. And the chaplain, far from being a noncombatant, may be like Rev. Peter Trone, chaplain of the 5th brigade, who, on a Sunday afternoon had been telling the troops that they should not forget that one of the greatest enemies to fight was satan. While he was extorting them to this constant warfare, a sudden federal attack was made. "Come on, boys!" shouted the chaplain, leaping to his saddle. "We'll fight the Yankees today and the devil tomorrow." It is best to recognize the chaplains as combatants. They would make good ones.

Hogs as Legal Tender.

From the Lincoln, Neb., State Journal.

Three years ago it was possible for a Minnesota farmer to exchange 28 hogs of the average mature weight for materials for a house of seven rooms. Now the same quantity of lumber and other building stuff may be had for 18 hogs of corresponding size. In 1916 it took 700 bushels of wheat to buy a barn 32x56 feet in size, when the same structure can now be had for 31 bushels. While lumber has advanced on the whole less than other commodities, the comparison holds fairly well all along the line. There has never been a time in the history of the country when the farmer could get more in exchange for his products than he can today.

CROPS IN WESTERN CANADA

Yields of Wheat, Splendid Production of Pork, Beef, Mutton and Wool.

Latest reports give an assurance of good grain crops throughout the Western Canada, where the oats and barley are now being cut, about ten days earlier than last year. Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta are all "doing their bit" in every way towards furnishing supplies for the allies.

While the total yield of wheat will not be as heavy as in 1915, there are indications that it will be an average crop in most of the districts. Word received at the St. Paul office of the Canadian Government, from a point near Delia, Alberta, says harvesting in that district is one month earlier than last year. His wheat crop is estimated at 35 bushels per acre. Some of his neighbors will have more. The average in the district will be about 30 bushels per acre. Now, with the price of wheat in the neighborhood of $2 per bushel, it is safe to say that there will be very few farmers who will be able to bank from forty to sixty dollars per acre after paying all expenses of seeding, harvesting and threshing, as well as taxes. The price of land in this district is from $60 to $90 per acre. What may be said of this district will apply to nearly any other in Manitoba, Saskatchewan or Alberta. Many farmers have come to Western Canada from the United States in the past three or four years, who having purchased land had the pleasure of completing their payments before they were due. They have made the money out of their crops during the past couple of years, and if they are as successful in the future as in the past they will not only put themselves and their families beyond all possibility of lack of money for the rest of their lives. It is not only in wheat that the farmers of Western Canada are making money. Cattle and hogs have brought them wealth. Hogs are easy to raise there—barley is plentiful and grass abundant. The climate just the kind that cattle glory in. The price is good and likely to remain so for a long time.

A few days since a farmer from Carlstad, Alberta, shipped a carload of hogs to the St. Paul market, and received a higher price than was ever before paid on that market. Two million, three hundred and seventy-seven thousand two hundred and fifty dollars was received at Winnipeg for hogs during the first six months of this year. 181,575 hogs were sold at an average price of $15 per cwt., and had an average weight of 200 pounds each. The raising of hogs is a profitable and continually growing industry of Western Canada, and this class of stock is raised as cheaply here as anywhere on the North American continent. There is practically no hog disease, and immense quantities of food can be produced cheaply.

It has been told for years that the prairies of Western Canada supply to the beef and milk producers the nutritive properties that go to the development of both branches. The stories that are now being published by cattlemen and beef cattle men verify the predictions that have ever been made regarding the country's immense fitness for the raising of both beef and dairy cattle. The sheep industry is developing rapidly. At a sale at Calgary 151,453 pounds of wool were sold at sixty cents a pound. At a sale at Edmonton 60,000 pounds were sold at even better prices than were paid at Calgary. The total clip for 1916 will probably approximate 3 million pounds. Many reports are to hand showing from six to eight pounds per fleece. 35 carloads were sold on the Toronto market alone.—Advertisement.

Fruit Production.

The production of apples in this country during the last six years has averaged over 60,000,000 barrels. The estimated value of this apple crop for 1915 was $145,000,000. The product of peaches in 1914 was estimated at 40,000 bushels, and of pears for the year 11,000,000 bushels. Considering all of the hardy fruits of the north and the tropical fruits of the south a vast bulk is gathered each year. Surely famine and starvation cannot come to a country thus favored.

SINGER'S SONS NOW SERVE TWO ARMIES

Spy Suspect Misses U-Boat Attack.

Newark, N. J.—Missing his ship because he was locked in a cabin on a spy suspect charge, William F. Fiske, a sailor of 44 South Twelfth street, Newark, was saved from possible death and given the opportunity of witnessing from another ship the destruction of a U-boat.

Fiske is now under arrest after attempting to go aboard the Cunarder Carmania, which put into Montreal a few days ago.

He sailed from this country as a sailor on the Cunarder Carmania May 19, and docked May 29. He was arrested the next day because he failed to register and because the name given on the ship's registry was different than the one he had given on previous trips to England. He explained that the shipping master had made an error in his name, but the authorities held him in the main Bridewell, Liverpool, until June 17.

In the meantime the Carmania, on which he was to have come back as a passenger, had sailed, and he was told to wait for the Aurania which was to sail on June 23. Before the latter ship sailed he heard of the torpedoing of the Carmania and the loss of many of the crew.

While waiting for his ship to sail he visited Newcastle on Tyne, and there saw chained in the harbor, he says, the merchant submarine Deutschland and 40 smaller war submarines. The name, he declared, was painted on the U boat, and she still flew the German merchant flag. Soldiers told him the submarines had been caught in the nets. From Newcastle he visited, on a pass, the prison camps on the Isle of Man where many of the captured submarine crews are held. In one of these camps there were 30,000 prisoners and in the other nearly 50,000.

"In Liverpool and in fact in all parts of England where I have been the majority of women are wearing overalls and doing men's work," he said.

Fiske sailed on the Aurania June 23. The ship was held up two days in the Mersey river, he says, while a fleet of 20 merchant ships gathered and awaited a convoy of destroyers, mine sweepers and patrol boats. We put to sea on the 25th," he said. "On the afternoon of the 30th I was sitting at the stern, directly under a deck gun. Suddenly the sun shone full in my face and I remarked that it had traveled pretty quickly. Then the gun went off and I was deaf for four days. A destroyer hailed us later and told us we had hit a U-boat and that oil and wreckage had been found."

WAGES OF FARM LABOR AND PRESENT PROFITS

From Wallace's Farmer.

The average farmer pays for farm labor just what he has to to get reliable help. The average farm hand holds out for all he can get, but rather than go without work will accept any wage which will enable him to live. The wage market, as a matter of fact, goes up and down in much the same way as the corn market and the hog market. When labor is plentiful, wages go down, but when the prices of everything are high, and there is a great demand in all the manufacturing establishments of the country for labor to make these high priced articles, then labor is scarce, and wages go up.

Wages of farm hands have been soaring the past year, and there is every indication of further advances, but worst of all, from the standpoint of the average farmer, the cost of labor has not only gone up, but the quality has distinctly deteriorated. Nevertheless, prices for grain are now such, and give every promise of being such, that the average farmer can afford to pay double the present prices for labor, and yet make fully as much money as he made before the war. Senator McCumber, of North Dakota, is quoted as saying, in the Congressional Record:

"No man on the face of the earth can raise wheat here for $2 a bushel, and pay $4 a day for the labor that goes into it. I know enough about farming to know that it is a physical impossibility."

As a matter of fact, man-labor has never been much over one-fifth the expense of raising wheat, the ordinary acre of wheat requiring not over 20 hours of man-labor altogether. According to our figuring, the wheat grower can pay 70 cents an hour for man-labor, 20 cents an hour for horse-labor ($11 a day for man and team), $3 a bushel for seed wheat, 50 per cent above the ordinary rent before the war, 30 per cent extra machinery expense, and yet make just as much money on $2 wheat as he made before the war on 90 cent wheat.

Much the same situation holds true with corn and oats as with wheat. With corn and wheat, especially with prices as they are now and with prices as they are likely to be during the coming winter, a man can pay twice the present farm wages and yet make more money than before the war. Of course, we do not believe that it is wisdom to pay twice the wages that are prevailing today, for the reason that some day this war is going to end, and prices are going back, to a certain extent at least. It must be remembered that it is more difficult to lower wages than it is the prices of corn and wheat, just as it is somewhat more difficult to raise wages than it is the prices of corn and wheat. For this reason, we do not like to see wages go up too fast. Nevertheless, it is well to appreciate that the farm hand is not getting his fair share of the prosperity of the grain growing farmer. The wise man will make no great mistake in paying a substantial premium above the average of his neighborhood for a really good, trust worthy hand.

Where Russians Are Retreating.

Rich Territory Invaded, But It Is Thought Impenetrable—Germans Checked Already.

"When the Austro-Germans following the disorganization of the Russian armies on the Galician front crossed the Zbrucz river, which separates Russia from Austria-Hungary, they entered the province of Podolia which next to Moscow is the most densely populated in the empire. Of this province the National Geographic society in a bulletin issued today says:

Podolia is one of the richest and most fertile regions in all Russia and is about as large as the combined areas of Maryland and Delaware. It lies entirely within what is known as Little Russia, with South Russia bordering it on the south, and West Russia on the north. The Bug river, which crosses the province from northwest to southeast, runs parallel to the Dniester, which forms the western boundary. The railroad extending from Lemburg to Odessa crosses the province midway between the Bug and the Dniester.

"The valley of the Bug is somewhat higher than that of the Dniester, and for a great part of its course the river is bordered by swamps and woodlands largely impenetrable to armies. Another railroad crosses the province at right angles to the Lemburg-Odessa road, while in the southeastern section there are several other lines.

"The climate of the province is rather cool in summer and cold in winter. The mean temperature of Washington in January is 33 degrees, that of the capital of Podolia is 24. On the other hand the mean temperature of Washington for July is 77 degrees, while that of Podolia's capital is 69 degrees. The average temperature is about that of Binghampton, N. Y.

"Sugar is the leading product of the provinces, no other state in the empire except Kiev having a larger output. A great deal of grain is grown and much flour is manufactured. Spirits and tobacco also are produced in considerable quantities.

"The population of the province is approximately 4,000,000, and there are some 5,000 manufacturing establishments, having 40,000 employes with an annual normal production valued at $48,000,000. The soil is largely like that of Iowa and is to a great extent cultivated after western methods, instead of those usually prevailing in southeastern Europe. Stock raising is also an important industry, and before the war there was a very large trade in horses, cattle and sheep with Austria-Hungary.

"The history of the province is full of interest. The days of the Romans are kept in memory by the wall of Trajan, which passes through several of its districts. When Poland became one of Europe's nations, Podolia was annexed to it and formed a part of the Polish empire until the last partition, which occurred in 1795.

"The menace of the invasion of the soil of Podolia and Bessarabia by the Austro-Germans is probably more apparent than real, at least so far as the predicted forecast drive on Odessa is concerned. It must be remembered that it is more than 250 miles, as the crow flies, between the present battle line of the Austro-Germans and the city reputed to be their objective. A line of communication stretched that long at a time when fighting men are more than at a premium, would either have to be so thinly defended or draw so many troops from other points, that the geographic difficulties involved would be many. The Lemberg-Odessa railroad is not in good condition, it is said, while the highways of both Podolia and Bessarabia are by no means comparable to the macadam highways of the west. In wet weather the roads have practically no bottom, and are next to impassable for heavy guns and wagon trains."

She Has Skill With a Skillet.

A writer in the Woman's Home Companion says:

"Where we are living at present we have no gas range, only a two-burner plate, and the coal range is so large that it requires a great deal of fuel to heat the oven sufficiently to bake even a few muffins or biscuit, so that I have tried to find a satisfactory substitute that could be cooked in a skillet. By using the skillet dry and sprinkling it lightly with flour, I bake very enjoyable biscuit cake or scone. For these I use simply a biscuit batter, made a trifle stiffer, patted or rolled to about a quarter-inch thickness. One must be sure to have the fire or gas low enough not to burn the outside of the scone before the inside has time to cook sufficiently. If gas is used, a more even distribution of the heat may be obtained by using a heated lid from the stove under the skillet; or a heavy piece of tin or sheet iron will serve the purpose."

The Test.

From the Columbus Dispatch.

You see, I have read every authority on the subject and have studied under the best professors in the country."

The fair visitor was making an application for a position in some sort of social work. The man at the desk listened in a polite way and seemed to consider the matter very carefully. Every now and then he glanced out of the window, then his glance for a brief moment would rest on the other young woman at the next window. She was also waiting to make her application.

"We used such-and-such a text at such-and-such a university, but, of course, since I studied under So-and-So, the other text doesn't have much weight with me," the applicant went on.

The man at the desk looked out of the window.

"Jibe him one in the jaw," yelled an urchin.

Two dirty little boys of the street were fighting a good Irish fight. The fair applicant neither saw nor heard. The man watched the girl at the next window. She was "in the fight" as much as she could be from where she stood. Her face was tense and her gloved hands were closed so tight that the seams were bursting.

"Why, Jim, I'd av give it to ye in the first place if I'd a knowd ye was hungry," was the next thing the man heard from the sidewalk.

"Isn't the noise of the street terrible from here," said the fair applicant, interrupting herself, "it must be dreadfully annoying to you."

But the man did not turn from the window. One dirty little Irishman thrust a scrawny hand into a ragged pocket that bulged and drew out a big red apple.

"Oh, shouldna fought ye fer it," said the other fighter, banging his head, as his companion forced the apple into his hand.

"I'l beat ye to the corner!" dared the donor, darting off at top speed.

The man at the deck looked up at the girl in the window who was waiting to talk with him. With a scrap of white linen she was wiping the silent tears from her eyes. After the much educated social worker had left the office he turned to the girl at the window.

"We want you," he said, with a strange gentleness in his voice. "It doesn't make so much difference about the credentials."

How to Wash the Porch.

In the Woman's Home Companion, a writer says:

"The one thing about our porch which I prize most, both for cleanliness and convenience sake, is a water faucet with 10 feet of hose attached for washing the porch. Ours is a second-story sleeping porch. We had the floor lined with water tight joints and have a trough at the outer edge connected with the drain spout from the roof. The bottom rail, holding the wainscoting, is four inches from the floor. Suspended from this rail by hinges, we have four-inch strips which open out and let the water drain quickly from the porch floor. Having copper screen wire, the screening can be washed at any time, and all dust which accumulates can be quickly washed away. (We would not do without this convenience which was our own thought and plan)."

Education and Democracy.

David Spence Hill, University of Wisconsin.

Today a student from afar observing for the first time the educational systems within all of the United States, from Pacific to Atlantic, might be impressed by three vivid characteristics of our American education. First, by the magnitude of present educational efforts, whether estimated by the 20,000,000 of young lives enrolled, or according to the $800,000,000 expended yearly for education; secondly, by the variability in educational organizations, administration, methods and expense; and thirdly, by the persistence of certain fundamental convictions, aspirations and of faith toward education, in the minds of our 100,000,000 of people. Now that the pillars of civilization tremble, well may we pause to scrutinize our educational system as it affects democracy, to examine present democracy as affecting education, and to consider both education and democracy in the light of human experience, in order that we may renew our zeal for our country and our belief in humanity.

YES! LIFT A CORN OFF WITHOUT PAIN!

Cincinnati man tells how to dry up a corn or callus so it lifts off with fingers.

You corn-pestered men and women need suffer no longer. Wear the shoes that nearly killed you before, says this Cincinnati authority, because a few drops of freezone applied directly on a tender, aching corn or callus, stops soreness at once and soon the corn or hardened callus loosens so it can be lifted off, root and all, without pain.

A small bottle of freezone costs very little at any drug store, but will positively take off every hard or soft corn or callus. This should be tried, as it is inexpensive and is said not to irritate the surrounding skin.

If your druggist hasn't any freezone tell him to get a small bottle for you from his wholesale drug house.—adv.

Getting Old Too Fast?

Late in life the body shows signs of wear and often the kidneys weaken first. The back is lame, bent and achy, and the kidney action distressing. This makes people feel older than they are. Don't wait for dropsy, gravel, hardening of the arteries or Bright's disease. Use a mild kidney stimulant. Try Doan's Kidney Pills. Thousands of elderly folks recommend them.

A South Dakota Case

Mrs. Henry Hofert, Salem, S. Dak., says: "For a year I was tortured by backache. The trouble made me so weak that I could hardly turn in bed and awful pains shot into my head. The kidney secretions were unnatural and I knew my kidneys were disordered. Three boxes of Doan's Kidney Pills fixed me up in good shape after everything else failed. I am now able to work all right and seldom have any sign of kidney trouble.

Feed the Fighters! Win the War!!

Harvest the Crops—Save the Yields

On the battle fields of France and Flanders, the United States boys and the Canadian boys are fighting side by side to win for the World the freedom that Prussianism would destroy. While doing this they must be fed and every ounce of muscle that can be requisitioned must go into use to save this year's crop. A short harvest period requires the combined forces of the two countries in team work, such as the soldier boys in France and Flanders are demonstrating.

The Combined Fighters in France and Flanders and the Combined Harvesters in America WILL Bring the Allied Victory Nearer.

A reciprocal arrangement for the use of farm workers has been perfected between the Department of the Interior of Canada and the Departments of Labor and Agriculture of the United States, under which it is proposed to permit the harvesters that are now engaged in the wheat fields of Oklahoma, Kansas, Iowa, North Dakota, South Dakota, Nebraska, Minnesota and Wisconsin to move over into Canada, with the privilege of later returning to the United States, when the crops in the United States have been conserved, and help to save the enormous crops in Canada which by that time will be ready for harvesting.

IS WELL WORTHY OF HONOR

Southern Journal Puts Forward the Claims of the Sunflower as the National Emblem.

There is nowhere such a yellow as in the petals of the biggest and most cheerfully nodding of all the black-eyed susans we have, there is nowhere such a richness as in the brown of its seeded heart. Nothing that grows is so friendly, so gracefully companionable whether through an open window or brushing lilly and happily up against one's person. It is no wenkling, the strong and lusty sunflower. It is largely masculine, with its straightness, disdain of pampering and love of the air it breathes and soil from which it springs. Adversity but builds it stronger, and extremes of weather affects it little. If our national flower, which we believe is the goldenrod, isn't quite satisfactory, let's adopt the fine, upstanding yellow sunflower, the king, onarch, complacent ruler of every flower that waves. Everything about King Sunflower is typically American and he's a democrat to the fiber and root of his being. Which is just what we want in America at this time.—Macon Telegraph.

Illustrated.

"Mamma," exclaimed the little girl next door as she ran into the kitchen of her own home, "mamma, Mrs. Jones has an illustrated tooth!"

Her mother laughed.

"A what?" she asked.

"An illustrated tooth; one that makes your face swell up real big."

Her mother laughed again, and harder. "You mean an ulcerated tooth," she corrected.

Her father heard of the incident and thought he would question her, too.

"Did you say Mrs. Jones had the mumps?" he queried.

"No," began the little girl again. "She has an illustrated tooth."

Her father laughed, and corrected her.

"Daddy," she remonstrated solemnly, "I don't see why you laugh when Mrs. Jones has an ulcer—I mean—illustrated tooth!"—Indianapolis News.

Admiral Bradley Fiske was talking in New York about a naval critic.

"This naval critic," he said, "reminds me of Swetson."

"'What's struck Swetson?' a man asked at the club. 'He failed in medicine, he failed in the law and he failed in the ministry, and now he's moved into a $2,500 flat in Riverside drive.

The visitors are requested to bring basket dinners and cups for coffee—coffee and cream will be furnished by the committee in charge. The musical program will be given by seven or more bands under the direction of Prof. Jeffers of Britt—as well as a number of vocal selections. The city of Garner will be properly decorated for the occasion and an effort made to properly care for the crowd

The people of Klemme should turn out for this Loyalty Day. A number of our young men will be in this draft and we should be on hand to give them a send-off

It will be the greatest event in the history of the county and you are wanted there to be a part of the large crowd. This is a county event, you are a part of this county and so be well represented there by going. We want Klemme to be well represented.

Don't forget that the date is September 18th, next Tuesday. Close up your place of business, lay aside your work; this is a patriotic holiday and you should lay aside your work and pay honor to the day.

Wilson Highway

BOARD SELECTS WILSON ROUTE

The directors of the Wilson Highway association held their first meeting Friday to determine the insignia for marking and to settle contests as to route. The meeting was called to order at Forest City at 10:30 a. m. by President H. H. Emmons. After a business session lasting one hour dinner was had and the inspection of the route from Forest City to Albert Lea was made. The road from Forest City to Lake Mills is in rather rough condition at this time owing to the work being done on this part of the highway, but will by next year be in fine shape.

A contest was on over the route from Lake Mills to Emmons, and also from Emmons to Albert Lea, the people in the neighborhood of Twin Lakes petitioning that the route run via that village. The directors drove north out of Lake Mills over the county road by Lime Creek church and to Albert Lea over the Pickerel Lake Road; returning home the journey was made via Twin Lakes and from Emmons the east road to Lake Mills was traveled, in this way covering the entire route of the contested territory.

On return to Lake Mills a business session was again held. On motion of Director Riehm of Hancock county and seconded by Director Barry of Wright county the road running along the Worth and Winnebago county line, known as the "east" road, was chosen as the route of the Wilson Highway. The petition of the citizens of Twin Lakes was on motion of Director Barry rejected, so the highway will be along the original Pickerel Lake road from Emmons to Albert Lea. Director Arneson of Worth county, after the decision was made favoring the east road north out of Lake Mills handed in a signed agreement from the farmers along that route that the road would be graded and graveled the entire distance.

The insignia or marker for the highway will be a white square 8x8 inches with a red stripe at top and bottom and a red letter "W" upon the white background. Metal signs will be used if possible.

The next meeting of the officers and board will be held at Belmond, Iowa, September 13th.

The work of marking the road and getting it before the public as the most direct route from Des Moines to St. Paul will be pushed as rapidly as possible. Every town and township through which the highway passes will be expected to join in a membership campaign to secure the necessary funds to push the work of completion Individual membership is $1.00. The Wilson Highway promises to become one of the most attractive automobile routes in Iowa, and every loyal son should help put this work through without a hitch.

The counties represented so far in the association are: Freeborn, Worth, Winnebago, Hancock, Wright, and Hamilton.

OLD BIRD STORK GETS BUSY

The old stork has been a busy bird in Klemme the past week. He ran out of the supply of boys before reaching Klemme but he left some nice pretty baby girls. The old bird left a girl at the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Stille on last Sunday night. The night before he left baby girls at the homes of Mr. and Mrs. Clark Bredbenner and Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Marshall.

THE KLEMME TIMES

Ray A. Jorgenson, Pub.

KLEMME, IOWA

As the old legend goes, the father of Greek King Midas, once king of Phrygia, was originally a poor peasant. The people of Phrygia being much disturbed, an oracle had informed them that a wagon would bring them a king who would put an end to all their troubles. Not long after this saying, Gordius (Midas' father) suddenly arrived in the midst of an assembly of the people, riding in his wagon. At once, to the great surprise of Gordius, they made him king. In his gratitude, Gordius dedicated the wagon to the god Zeus, and it was placed in the acropolis at Gordium. The pole of the wagon was tied to the yoke by a knot of bark, and a second oracle declared that whoever untied that knot should reign over all Asia. It was Alexander who untied the knot with his sword, thus assuming himself to be the man referred to by the oracle.

A method of preserving eggs, which is said to keep them perfectly fresh for a long time, is used in France through a gas process. New laid eggs in tin cases holding 1,000 each, are placed in an autoclave, from which the air is exhausted until all the gas within the shells has been drawn out. Then carbonic gas and nitrogen are introduced from tanks of these gases in liquid form, and the tins containing the eggs are sealed with solder. Any germs of decay are killed by these gases, and it is said that the flavor of the eggs is in no way affected.

The Chinese are proud of large families, and a large family living together under one roof is looked upon as proof of the good temper and correct course of life of its members and as a sure path to prosperity. A large family which is able to live together without dividing up the property always receives much credit and is highly respected. It is one of the highest distinction in China to have Wu Fu Tung Tang, or five generations, under one roof although such a distinction is attained by very few.

The Bible Orchard is a piece of land in the parish of St. Ives, Hants, England. Dr. Robert Wilde, who died in August, 1678, bequeathed £50, the yearly interest on which was to be expended in the purchase of six bibles, not exceeding the price of 7s 6d each, which should be "cast for by dice" on the communion table of St. Ives on the last Thursday of May, by six boys and six girls of the town. Hence the day is known as "Bible Thursday." The capital sum was invested in what is known as Bible Orchard.

The famous statue of St. Bruno at Rome was made by the great master of French sculptor, Houdon (1741-1828). At the invitation of Franklin, Houdon visited America in the year 178- and took cast for the statue of Washington now at Richmond, Va., said by Lafayette to be the best likeness obtained of the American Patriot. St. Bruno belonged to the order of Trappists, whose chief law was silence. Pope Clement XVI, on seeing the statue of St. Bruno, exclaimed: "He would speak did not the rule of his order forbid."

The word "junker" has frequently been used in connection with the Prussian government, and there is inquiry as to its meaning. A "junker," says the Columbus, Ohio, Dispatch (Jungherr) is the scion of a noble house which has devoted itself to military service, a member of the aristocratic party in Prussia which came into power under Bismarck when he was prime minister. Herr Bamberger described a junker as "a mixture of Charles I, Arabian Prussian lieutenant, German feudal lord and Spanish Don Quixote."

Mrs. Smith hired a Chinese servant, says the Los Angeles Times, and tried to teach him how to receive calling cards. She let herself out the front door, and when the new servant answered her ring she gave him her card. The next day two ladies came to visit Mrs. Smith. When they presented their cards the alert Chinaman hastily compared them with Mrs. Smith's card, and remarked as he closed the door: "Ticket no good; you can't come in."

For the fifth consecutive year a robin and his strange mate, a blackbird, have returned to the yard, at 104 Scotland street, Orange, N. J., and built their nest. The robin's first mate, one of its own species, was killed by a dog and the black bird took up her home there. The eggs each season hatch out brown birds resembling a thrush, and these fly away when their wings are sufficiently strong, and never return.

A tablecloth ornamented with a design of green leaves until recently graced the board of a farm house in Dutch Moon road back of Allamuchy, N. J., and was the particular pride of the farmer's wife, Mrs. William Crawn. One morning lately Mrs. Crawn hung it on a clothes line, and in half an hour was surprised and pained according to the New York Herald, to see three deer eating it greedily.

The ash leaf left on burning tobacco is considerable and the mineral matter of the tobacco leaf frequently amounts to as much as a fifth part of its weight. Thus a ton of tobacco leaf would yield four hundredweights of ash, which represent valuable mineral constituents withdrawn from the soil.

The "Arabian Nights" stories were translated into English from the Arabic by Antonie Galland, a French savant and traveler, who died in 1715. He obtained them in their original form during his visit to the east as an attache of the French embassy at Constantinople.

After a moving picture reel has been made it must be "edited" in somewhat the same method as is a manuscript. This operation is performed by the editor making his direction in a dictating machine as the reel is worked off in front of him.

There are more than 6,000,000 Africans among the 17,000,000 of people in Brazil, and many of them the crudest type of negro on the American hemisphere.

Although there is a larger habitable area in South America than in North America, there are only half as many people in the southern continent.

A million emigrants a year were pouring into South America before the war. They came from Italy, Spain, Germany, England, Holland, Scandinavia, Portugal, China, Japan and India; but there is no emigration from North America.

It appears that smokers are throwing away annually about 8,000 tons of valuable material, the ashes of the tobacco they consume.

More than 3,000,000 persons are ill on any day in the year, and of these 500,000 are suffering from consumption, a preventable disease.

THIEVES TAKE SILKS FROM FONDA STORE

Make Away With $5,000 Stock in Automobile—No Trace of Culprits Found.

Fonda, Ia., Sept. 8.—Automobile thieves visited Fonda Thursday and removed between $3,000 and $5,000 worth of goods from the Tolan Bros. Company department store.

Entrance was made by forcing the transom above the main entrance door and all the silks on the shelves of the silk department were removed, the fur and plush coats hanging on the racks were taken, and the dresses on display were removed. The rear door was unscrewed from its hinges and evidently the goods were loaded in one car.

The first that was known of the robbery was when John Tolan, of the Tolan Bros. company found a bolt of silk near the lumber yard and recognized his price mark upon it. Mr. Tolan immediately went to the store and discovered the robbery.

Sheriff Winegarden, of Pocahontas, made a quick trip over from the county seat and with Chief of Police George Hurlis is busy this morning notifying police officers and running down clews as to the identity of the robbers.

GERMAN LANGUAGE GIVEN PASSPORTS IN WEBSTER CITY

Webster City, Ia., Sept. 7.—German has been given its passports by the Webster City schools. It is to become a "lost art."

The board, by unanimous action, has taken it out of the course of study. Spanish or French will later be substituted for it. Spanish, being almost the universal language of Central and South America, will probably be given the preference.

Members of the senior class who in order to get their full credits to graduate next spring will be allowed to finish the German course they began last year. But absolutely no first year German at all is to be permitted.

It is noticeable that there are more German children than usual attending the public schools.

GRAND JURY FAILS TO FIND ENOUGH EVIDENCE

Cherokee, Ia., Sept. 8.—The grand jury failed to find a "true bill" against George Huntley in connection with the Kniffen murder, and he was released from custody. What little evidence they could procure was of a purely circumstantial character and was deemed insufficient for an indictment.

WEATHER FAVORABLE FOR CORN MATURING

Osceola, Ia., Sept. 8.—The weather has been favorable for the maturity of the corn crop. Much of the corn is dented and farmers are beginning to select seed corn from the fields. The shock threshing is nearly finished. The farmers are doing road work and cutting the weeks in the highways.

DAVENPORT SCHOOLS CLOSE; NINE DEATHS FROM PLAGUE

Davenport, Ia., Sept. 8.—The schools of Rockingham, a suburb of this city, were closed today owing to the appearance of infantile paralysis there. Davenport schools were closed two days ago. At the last report there were 19 cases in Davenport with nine deaths within two weeks. A number of cases are reported in Rock Island, Ill.

TO MAKE "TRENCH TORCHES" FOR MEN AT THE FRONT

Fort Dodge, Ia., Sept. 8.—The branch of the W. C. T. U. of Fort Dodge, Ia., will take up a new patriotic work at the next meeting.

French "torches," for the men who are on the firing line in France. These torches will be made of old newspapers which will be tightly rolled into solid tubes, cutting them up into short lengths and dipping them in wax. They will be used for lighting trenches and heating rations.

CEDAR RAPIDS—Capt. C. W. Taylor who saw service in the Mexican border trouble has been appointed military instructor for the public schools here and in conjunction with F. J. Hopkin, physical instructor, a series of military drills and instruction in the manual of arms will be given to all pupils. Cedar Rapids is one of the first cities in the state to institute military training as a preparedness measure.

CEDAR FALLS—Publication a week ago of a story relating how H. H. Hamilton 20 years old employed in a local bakery had jumped from comparative poverty into a fortune of approximately $50,000 through a legacy left in trust by a great uncle 10 years ago, has disclosed the fact that he is apparently a wife deserter and has a wife and little son living in Grinnell, Ia.

IOWA CITY—A Ford car being driven by Miss Edna Potter turned over at a point a few miles east of Wellman, south of here, pinning the driver beneath and throwing Wilbur Wasson the owner of the car several feed distant to safety. When the car was removed from Miss Potter it was found that her neck was dislocated and death must have been instantaneous.

CEDAR RAPIDS—The recent appointment by Governor Harding of Atherton B. Clark as judge of the superior court here to succeed Maj. C. B. Robbins, who has gone to Deming, N. M., with other Iowa military officers, promises to cause something of a breach in the republican party organization in Linn county.

TRAIN RED CROSS WORKERS.

Washington, Sept. 7.—Need for thousands of workers in the Red Cross home service in aiding families of United States soldiers and sailors and an increased demand with the continuance of the war, has caused the Red Cross to establish 24 institutes in connection with prominent universities and schools of philanthropy where volunteer workers will be given an intensive six weeks training. Institutes have been established in the west including: Iowa, University of Iowa; Minnesota, University of Minnesota.

TELLS OF CHILD'S MURDER.

St. Johnsbury, Vt., Sept. 7.—How the body of little Alice Bradshaw was hidden was related by John Kerwin on the witness stand today at the trial of Mrs. Alvin Kenniston for the murder of the child. At the bidding of Mrs. Kenniston, Kerwin testified, he carried the body up the lonely country road.

They had gone about a mile, Kerwin testified, when they observed a light far up the road, coming toward them. Kerwin said he became frightened and after dropping the body in a field near the roadside, hurried back home with Mrs. Kenniston.

"SPOTTED" RAINS OF DOUBTFUL BENEFIT

Northern Section of State Suffers While Southeastern Districts Benefit.

Des Moines, Ia., Sept. 8.—Rains of the past few days were beneficial to the southern portion of Iowa and harmful to the north section, according to crop experts. The spotted rains revived burned pastures in the southeastern sections and there will be no further damage by drought, in the opinion of H. A. Wallace.

Wallace said reports said the corn had been damaged more than the average portion realized, but no figures were available.

According to Dr. Chappel, weather forecaster for the state, the showers benefited potatoes, but could not be considered as a help to corn, for already corn has had too much water. Pasturage, he said, was brought back. Other crop experts agreed that little rain was needed to aid corn in maturing.

BOY YEGGMEN ARE NOW "SOMEWHERE IN AMERICA"

Council Bluffs, Ia., Sept. 8.—Police are looking for two little "Jimmy Valentines" who were picked up last Friday afternoon at the circus when they confessed to working the combination of the safe in the Louis Kroloff store, 2000 Sixth avenue, and robbing the W. E. Owens store on South Twenty-first street.

Not content with getting into the limelight with their "second story" activity, the two boys effected a jail delivery and now, as far as the police know, are "somewhere in America." The two boys, Willie Stacker and Charles Shields, were being held for juvenile authorities in the detention home.

Sunday morning about 9 o'clock Mrs. Caroline Johnson discovered the lads were gone. They had pried the bars from one of the windows and squeezed through, disappearing over the hills.

Most of the stuff that the boys took from the stores, including notes and insurance papers, was recovered. Some of the money, too, was got back, but that which the lads had spent to see the sights of the "big top" and make circus day a gala one, is gone.

TWO WATERLOO MEN RUN AFOUL OF GOVERNMENT

Waterloo, Ia., Sept. 8.—As the result of allied pro-German utterances, A. G. Horn and Herman Webbeking, both of Waterloo, were arrested by E. R. Moore, United States marshal. Each gave bond for $5,000 to appear before the federal grand jury. They are charged with making remarks against the government and against the president.

M. H. Healy, deputy marshal, has departed with Mr. Moore for a trip that will include several towns in this vicinity. From here the party went to Hudson, where it is scheduled to make an investigation. The next stop will be Grant Center, then at Wellsburg, Parkersburg and Keslev. Several arrests are expected to be made as a result of the tour.

While in the city Marshal Moore declared that the government had just started its fight against subjects who insist on talking too much. No quarter will be shown and a vigorous campaign is to be waged until the pro-German utterances cease.

HUSBAND COMES FOR WIFE WHO MARRIED CIRCUS MAN

Ida Grove, Ia., Sept. 8.—It now develops that one couple with the carnival company who were married in this city Wednesday of last week are in for court trouble. The names given by the couple were J. L. Barbee and Nellie Z. Zimmerman, the bride-to-be informing the clerk of the courts that her home was at Armour, S. D., and that this was her first venture in matrimony. However, J. W. Shumate, a musician in Sioux City came to Ida Grove Tuesday and claimed that the young woman who gave her name as Zimmerman, was his wife and that she left him about a week before her second marriage without giving any reason. The carnival company went to Council Bluffs from here and the officials here sent him to that place to obtain a warrant for the couple's arrest.

GERMAN ALIEN IN DRAFT ARMY FROM IDA GROVE

Ida Grove, Sept. 8.—Ida county sent its 5 per cent quota for the national army to Camp Dodge at Des Moines at noon yesterday, and out of the four men, three were married and one single. Earl C. Smith, of Arthur, was given charge of the three men, who are Charles Willey Detlefson, of Battle Creek, Raymond C. Anspach, of Ida Grove, and Roy Clarence Sweet, of Battle Creek. Detlefsen, who is 22 years old, has only been a resident of the United States about a year and a half, and is a citizen of Germany yet, having never made application for citizenship. However, he expressed himself so strongly against Germany that there is no question but what he will do his part against the autocratic power of his native country.

EXPECT EARLY COMPLETION OF FT. DODGE COFFER DAM

Fort Dodge, Ia., Sept. 8.—Work on the coffer dam, preparatory to repairing the washout in the river bed beneath the municipal daw, is progressing favorably.

The box which will form the back of the dam is now under construction. When this has been made waterproof, it will be joined to the big dam and the water pumbed out so that the concrete can be poured. It is expected that the work will be completed in a few weeks.

PAGE MR. RETIRED FARMER.

Ames, Ia., Sept. 8.—Will someone please page the retired farmer. He is needed at once. That he will be called upon to go back to the farm, take hold of the reins and plow handle and do the work of the younger men who have been called to war is the opinion of Governor W. L. Harding, as he expressed it in his patriotic address before the conservation mass meeting at the state fair at Des Moines, on Monday, August 27. If a man has $1,000,000 and knows how to farm, it's back to the farm he must go, declared the governor, if he wants to be a loyal citizen.

LOGAN—The most important case coming up for hearing in the district court will be the $10,000 breach of promise suit of Ethelyn Skelton, of Omaha, against Dr. Lewis Crain, of Missouri Valley. Attorney William F. Wappack, of Omaha, appears for the plaintiff and Attorney William P. Welch, of Logan, for the defendant. The case will be full of interest.

DELTA—Secret service men are investigating the cause of the fire here last week which threatened to destroy the entire town. The conflagration started in an empty icehouse belonging to the Foster residence and consumed two barns belonging to Anthony Stought and Mrs. Vic McNabb, and Dr. Sterlin's automobile.

MUCH OF CORN CROP IS NOT YET MATURE

Unless Frost Is Delayed, Large Part of Crop May Be Damaged.

Des Moines, Ia., Sept. 7.—That the corn crop stands a poor chance of fully maturing before frost is indicated by today's weekly forecast of weather and crop conditions. The weekly report of George M. Chappel, the director, today says.

"The week was cool, there being an average daily deficiency of about 3 degrees. The nights especially were very cool, and a trace of frost was observed on low ground in the northern counties on two mornings. The rainfall was very light and poorly distributed until the last day, when moderate to heavy showers occurred in nearly all districts. The rain will be of great benefit for late potatoes, pastures and for softening the ground for fall plowing preparatory to a greatly increased acreage of winter wheat and rye, but is now detrimental for the development of corn, which absolutely needs dry, warm, sunshiny weather to mature the crop before the average date of first killing frost. Reports received from crop correspondents on September 1 show that with normal weather there will be about 37 per cent of the corn crop safe from frost on September 20, 59 per cent on September 30, 87 per cent on October 15 and at least 5 per cent of the crop will not be matured on October 21. The average condition of corn as compared with the average of past years on September 1, was 84 per cent; pastures, 80; potatoes, 95, and flax, 94. On September 1, 1916, the conditions were as follows: Corn, 83 per cent; potatoes, 58; flax, 88; pastures, 77. The low condition of corn last year was due to droughty conditions over the southern counties, while this year the condition would be excellent if it were not for the fact that the crop is so late.

IOWA POLITICAL POT IS AGAIN BOILING QUIETLY

Des Moines, Ia., Sept. 7.—Although war is dominating the interest of public men as well as the public generally, nevertheless politicians are looking forward to the June primary and planning candidacies. In fact, formal political announcements of importance are being made but leaders generally understand the lineup for the important jobs.

As to governor, no prominent candidates other than Governor Harding have appeared. The democrats say they will name a man on whom the democratic party can unite and make a hard fight for the governorship.

Lieut. Gov. E. R. Moore, of Cedar Rapids, will be a candidate for reelection, and says no opposition of a formidable character is in evidence.

State Auditor F. S. Shaw will be a candidate again and thus far has no opposition.

E. C. Hoyt of Manchester, appointed state treasurer by Governor Harding to succeed W. C. Brown will be out for state treasurer. Representative R. J. Johnson, of Humboldt, is considering going after this job, as is also Senator Thomas of Kent.

Attorney General H. M. Havner will run again. No opposition has come out against him thus far.

Nate Kendall, of Albia, former congressman, and at one time speaker of the house of representatives, is being mentioned as a possible opponent of Senator Kenyon for the junior senatorial toga.

Clifford Thorne may run for congress again in the Second district. Senator Cady Chase of Webster City and Senator H. S. Van Alstine, of Gilmore City are both mentioned as opponents of Congressman Frank Woods in the Tenth district.

DYNAMITE DISCOVERED UNDER BIG WAREHOUSE

New Hampton, Ia., Sept. 7.—Fourteen pounds of dynamite were found under the warehouses of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul railroad yesterday.

The dynamite was carefully wrapped in paper and with caps attached.

There was enough to blow the building and contents to pieces. An employe discovered the explosive and turned the evidence over to authorities.

It is believed to be the work of German sympathizers.

ALTA ADVERTISER IS UNDER NEW MANAGEMENT

Alta, Ia., Sept. 7.—LeRoy A. Rader has purchased the Alta Advertiser from Mrs. E. C. Thatcher and W. J. Lyons. Mrs. Thatcher will retire from newspaper work for the present. Mr. Lyons is at present looking for a new location and will no doubt have a newspaper by the first of the month.

MASON CITY—Mason City people voted yesterday at a special school election to purchase for the school district the old memorial university, which was built by sons of veterans a number of years ago. There were 761 affirmative votes and 157 negative votes.

BELLEVUE—Mr. and Mrs. Matt Scheckel, prominent farmers living near Bellevue, have the best balanced family in this part of Iowa, a new baby girl having just joined their household, which now comprises 16 children, eight boys and eight girls.

WAVERLY—John O'Loughlin, balloonist, was instantly killed in an ascension at the county live stock fair here when he fell 2,000 feet.

POTATO PRICE WILL BE FIXED IN FRANCE

Paris, Sept. 5.—The minister of provisions has announced, that beginning on September 15, he will assume control over the prices of all potatoes and beans grown in France, and will determine for each region raising these products the prices which may be charged for them. All trade prices will be decided by him on the basis of recommendations from departmental committees. The prices established will be revised every two months and no exportation of these vegetables from the department of origin will be permitted except upon certificate.

A perfumery atomizer small enough to be carried in a pocketbook is the idea of a French inventor.

GURKO, TO BE EXILED, MAY CHOOSE PLACE

Petrograd, Sept. 5.—General Gurko, former commander on the southwestern front, charged with treasonable conduct toward the revolution, will be exiled from Russia.

He will be permitted to choose the place of his residence.

A commission has been appointed by the government to draft a law for the summary punishment of treasonable acts "in the rear," which is intended to include all Russia.

SUSPECT HELD FOR MURDER AT CHEROKEE

George Huntley Is Held in Connection With Slugging of William Kniffin.

Cherokee, Ia., Sept. 6.—George Huntley, who for some time has been suspected of knowing more about the murder of William Kniffin than he pretended, has been placed under arrest and is held for investigation. He was arrested at Primghar by an officer of that place and was brought to Cherokee by Sheriff Huber.

The arrest of Huntley follows an investigation made by T. A. Passwater, a state agent, who had been working on the case with Sheriff Huber, for about 10 days. Huntley, since the fatal slugging of Kniffin with whom he had associated quite a bit before the murder, has told conflicting stories.

Last week, by arrangement, a friend talked with Huntley and told him that if he knew anything about the murder of Kniffin the best thing he could do would be to leave town. Shortly afterward he disappeared with his horse and wagon. It is believed he was on his way to Pipestone, Minn., when apprehended.

Since his return to Cherokee, Huntley has repeatedly protested his innocence. He spends most of his time crying.

GIRL AIDS SWEETHEART TO GET INTO THE ARMY

Marshalltown, Ia., Sept. 6.—Donald Scoville, 18 years old, was in a funk.

His father wouldn't let him enlist—said he was "too young."

So Donald hiked to the Marshalltown recruiting station—and enlisted, anyway. When Scoville, senior, found it out, he took the boy home.

Donald conferred with his "best girl." Of course, she didn't want to see him leave, but all the other boys were going away to war. Her Donald was brave.

Across the country, at Mason City, there was another recruiting station. The girl—loyal Donald wouldn't tell her name today — borrowed her father's car. It was for a short pleasure spin, she said.

Two hours later Donald was in Mason City. Under another name he enlisted. Then amid the tearful goodbys of the brave little girl in the automobile, he started for Omaha. Yesterday afternoon he left for Fort Logan.

CLAIM JUNKERS HAVE LIST OF LOYAL IOWA GERMANS

Des Moines, Ia., Sept. 6.—The German government is believed to have a card index list of Iowa Germans who can be depended upon to "back up" the Vaterland with "talk" and "dollars."

Teuton emissaries compiled the statistics in 1914, at the outbreak of the European war, according to W. F. Johnston, Hardin county newspaper man, who was in Des Moines Thursday to report pro-German activities to United States secret service men.

He has reason to believe similar data was secured in every state in the union, and forwarded to Berlin.

"When I was doing special edition work in the fall of 1914," said Mr. Johnston, "I learned that German agents were combing Iowa for the names of every Teuton who was born in the Vaterland. Hardin county Germans so informed me, and during my travels I personally encountered several of these emissaries.

1,000,000,000-BUSHEL WHEAT CROP ASSURED, HE SAYS

The agriculturalist has concluded a series of conferences relative to the campaign to increase the winter wheat acreage, and will depart for Washington soon. Sessions have been held with agricultural leaders and in cooperation with state colleges, at Washington, Atlanta, Kansas City, Indianapolis and Spokane. President Pearson just recently was appointed by David F. Houston, secretary of agriculture, as chairman of a committee to develop an agricultural program for next year.

Petrograd, Sept. 8.—Petrograd is preparing for a German attack. Placards are scattered everywhere on streets and buildings calling on every Russian to do his duty. Troops are passing through the streets en route to the front to repel the invader.

But the capital remains quiet. No panic is visible. Riga's fall electrified the city but it was not a shock of fear but rather an impetus to patriotic endeavor.

AUSTRIAN LOSSES 120,000

Udine, Italy, Sept. 8.—About 30,000 prisoners have been taken to date by the Italians in their present offensive, while the total losses of the Austrians are estimated at 120,000.

The Austrian plan now seems to be to abandon counter attacks and remain on the defensive along the eastern front of the Bainsizza plateau, where their positions such as Crook Drago and Volnik, about 1,000 feet high, dominate those occupied by the Italians by several hundred feet. The same time concentering the efforts of their reserve troops on the Carso and the hope of checking the slow but determined march of the Italians toward Trieste.

Greatest Effort Made.

The Brestovizza valley north of Hermada, has been transformed into an inferno, with thousands of tons of pouring shells from all directions upon it, while the Austrian infantry is constantly is attacking. The Italians have withstood no less than nine rushes of the enemy from the opposite side. Sometimes their forces have been forced to withdraw slightly but immediately have recovered the lost ground.

From the Hamada south to the sea the Austrian infantry is attacking with the same fierceness and the battle is raging uninterruptedly. The present effort is considered the maximum one of which the Austrians are capable.

SAYS POPE ASKS U.S. DEMOCRACY

German Paper Demands U.S. Secure Constitutional Guarantees to Prevent Wilson Using Autocratic Powers.

Berlin, Sept. 8.—A demand that the American people secure a constitutional guarantee so that in the future the president would be unable to exercise autocratic powers, was made by the Lokal Anzeiger today. The newspaper asserted that in reality the request was voiced by Pope Benedict.

The editorial was impelled upon receipt of dispatches quoting the state department as declaring that the United States would not require the destruction of the Hohenzollern dynasty as a prelude to peace.

It comments at length upon dispatches from Petrograd published by the papers of allied countries revealing secret correspondence between the pope and the czar. The Vossische Zeitung admitted the authenticity of the correspondence.

"That's the stuff!" yelled a number of privates in chorus and the word ran all up and down the long khaki lines amid another outburst of cheering.

SAY TRAITOR'S WIFE SPENT ALL HIS MONEY

She is on trial as an accomplice in the crimes of which the general is accused.

His wife pretended she had taken poison, he testified, and refused to take an antidote until he promised to as- sume the guilt necessary for her di- vorce and pay her 4,000 rubles a year. She was 25 years old at that time and General Soukhomlinoff was 60.

Nineteen persons were killed and 26 wounded. The huts attacked contained only severely wound- ded men, who were unable to move their cots.

The hostile airplanes flew over the hospital every 20 minutes from 8:30 o'clock in the evening until 3 o'clock in the morning.

ASKS SOLDIERS SAVE THEIR PAY

General Sibert Plans to Interest U. S. Fighters, Second Best Paid in World, in War Bonds.

By the United Press.

American Field Headquarters, France, (by mail).—American soldiers have so much money and so little to spend it for that General Sibert is trying to find some law to make the boys save part of their pay.

The khaki clad boy from home has just three regular items to pay for—to- bacco, hair cuts, and laundry services. He may cut out the laundry bill by do- ing his own washing.

General Sibert is trying to interest the soldiers in the American bond is- sues or the loans of the French gov- ernment.

Uncle Sam's troops are second only to the Australian and New Zealand troops in the amount of money they earn. The Anzacs get about $1.50 a day and are the highest paid army in the world.

But both the Anzacs and the Cana- dians who get $1.10 a day the same pay as the Americans or foreign ser- vice are compelled to reserve part of their pay for their dependents or to form a nest egg against the possible "rainy day," following demobilization when the war has been won.

An occasional bottle of light wine or a daily ration of milk chocolate are practically the only dissipations open to the American troops.

Gambling is prohibited in the army. That closes the avenue of speculation.

A small number of far-sighted fight- ers made a good sized clean-up on to- bacco when the tobacco famine hit the camp a couple of weeks ago. They had laid in reserve stocks of makings and tailor made and found quick sales at ridiculous prices. 20 francs for a sack of tobacco and as high as $1 apiece for cigarets.

The majority of the soldiers are ex- pected to adopt the saving suggestion willingly. In the British imperial army it has been proved that men can save money on 25 cents a day and some French poilus lay aside some of their meager pay of 5 cents a day.

U. S. WILL WIN ANOTHER VICTORY

British Premier Rouses Audi- ence to Cheers by Declara- tion That America Has Never Known Defeat.

Birgenhead, England, Sept. 8.—"America has never known defeat and on this occasion also she will triumph," was the confident declaration of Pre- mier Lloyd-George here today that swayed a great crowd to thunderous applause. The premier admitted that the news from Russia was "disquiet- ing," but declared his complete con- fidence that Russian leaders would re- pair the machine now under fire.

Lloyd-George spoke in accepting the freedom of the city.

"German attempts to sew dissension among the allies on the west and east have failed. Germany has decided to invade Russia with the sword because her other methods failed.

"The Russian revolution postponed an allied victory. We had expected an earlier recovery, but are not discour- aged. Russia's leaders are repairing their machine. I am confident they will succeed."

The premier reiterated his oft ex- pressed defiance of the German sub- marine campaign.

"I am convinced that the submarines will never be able to beat down the em- pire's strength nor the allies' hopes," he said.

London, Sept. 8.—Coincidental with the announcement that Premier Lloyd- George will deliver an important speech on the war aims of the allies at Birkenhead today, prominence is given by the newspapers to a statement by Sir Edward Carson in which he de- clares:

"There is a great deal of very loose and mischievous talk about peace. Some people seem to imagine we have only to conclude a treaty with Ger- many and all will be well. But I should like to ask what is to happen then? Are the nations of the world to proceed with preparations for the next conflict—to pursue their re- searches in science to the expansion and creation of still more deadly weapons of warfare—to spend their re- sources in the creation of enormous cohorts of airplanes and submarines for the destruction of unfortified towns and the murder of the innocent women and children that inhabit them; to take advantage of the experiences gained in this way in the improve- ment of lethal and poisonous gases for the destruction of humanity? Are we to live in daily terror that at any moment another conflict may arise, which might almost lead to the extinc- tion of civilization itself?

"The truth is a treaty of peace does not necessarily secure peace. We talk platitudes about a league of nations to enforce peace. There was a league of nations to protect Belgium, there were solemn treaties and conventions at The Hague to apply the principles of humanity as far as possible in war and give effect to international law. How did these avail on the outbreak of the war?"

Sir Edward then quotes the German emperor as saying there is no interna- tional law—that treaties are scraps of paper and so forth, and adds:

"I have not yet seen a single sugges- tion made as to how in the future these calamities are to be prevented from re- curring if the lawless temper of the Germans remains unrepentant and their power to repeat their crimes re- mains what it has been in the past rel- atively to the rest of the world. Presi- dent Wilson is right when he declares no terms signed by the present rulers of Germany would afford the slightest security for the peace of the world, and nothing is more certain than that just in proportion as the military defeat of Germany is incomplete, the duration of peace will be short. Whatever terms Germany might now bring herself to accept in order to recuperate her strength for another aggression, her people would soon forget such economic privations as they have had to endure and would remain convinced they proved themselves invincible."

Sir Edward asserted that if this war is to put to an end all war, German mil- itarism must be sufficiently crushed to make fresh aggression by her impos- sible for a long time to come—and "un- til it is no longer possible for the Ger- man people themselves to be deluded by the legend of their invincibility in arms."

Des Moines, Ia., Sept. 7.—The state counsel of defense today is sending out letters to editors of German papers in Iowa, asking them point blank whether they are for Uncle Sam or for the kai- ser. If answers are not satisfactory and if German papers continue to print seditious sentiments they will be su- pressed.

POLES DISAPPOINT TEUTON CONQUERORS

Germans' Work Made More Dif- ficult Because of Attitude, General Admits.

Amsterdam, Sept. 8.—In a recent speech at Warsaw, General Von Bezel- er, governor general of the Russian territory occupied by the Germans, frankly admitted that the Germans had failed to win the sympathy of the Poles.

"We have experienced much which we would have preferred not to experi- ence," he said.

"Our work here is made very much more difficult in this way," he con- tinued. "The Poles now complain that there is still no government, but this is a matter which cannot be settled off hand. They must be satisfied with our temporary rule, which is intended only for the good of the country."

CORN YIELD INCREASED

Washington, D. C., Sept. 8.—Better weather favored crops generally dur- ing August and as a result larger yields were forecast today by the de- partment of agriculture in its esti- mates based on conditions existing Sep- tember 1.

The forecast of each crops final pro- duction, which may be larger or smaller than indicated as conditions before harvest are better or worse, with the forecast of production made last month based on the August 1 condition, the final production of last year and the average of the crops for the five years from 1911 to 1915 (stated in millions of bushels, i. e., 000,000's omitted), fol- lows:

*Production figures for winter wheat rye and hay are preliminary estimates.

Comparison of the September with the August production forecast indi- cates the changes in prospects caused by weather and other conditions dur ing the month of August.

The great corn crop, which is a rec ord breaker, was developing in a fair to excellent manner in the main corn growing states when the September canvass was made by department of agriculture agents and correspondents. In Kansas, where the August report indicated the production would be cut about in half by the severe weather conditions of July, rain had brought rapid recovery and there were pros- pects of a good yield in the eastern and south central parts of the state. A better crop in Oklahoma than was anticipated, will result from late im- provement. With favorable weather in Missouri during the next fortnight there will be a larger yield in that state, while in Iowa the crop was making satisfactory growth considering the cool weather.

The crop is late in Iowa and in other central and northern districts, and weather somewhat better than normal will be needed to carry it past frost danger in many sections. In the south the crop is maturing and harvesting has begun.

Harvesting Completed.

Harvesting of winter wheat has been completed and threshing is continuing in the northwest and upper Rocky mountain region. Plowing for the next winter wheat crop was in progress in most central and northern states, ex- cept where delayed by dry weather. Some seeding of winter wheat and rye had begun.

Yields and quality of spring wheat were better than was anticipated in many sections of the north. Harvest- ing of spring wheat, oats, and barley mostly was completed and threshing was making excellent progress. Bar- ley was yielding well where irrigated in Pacific coast states. Drought dam- aged flax considerably in North Dako- ta, and northern Minnesota, while the crop is irregular in South Dakota, where harvesting had begun.

White potatoes showed favorable de- velopment in central and northern sec- tions. Rain was needed in some dis- tricts, and there was some frost damage in the extreme north. Sweet potatoes de- veloped well in most southern states and were being harvested in the south- eastern states.

Frost Must Hold Off

In a summary of crop conditions, the crop reporting board says:

"The great corn crop of 325,000,000,000 bushels promised on September 1, which is 123,000,000 bushels above any pre- vious year, will be realized fully in the form of sound corn only, provided frost holds off unusually late. A good big crop of sound corn is promised if kill- ing frost in the main belt does not come earlier than usual. The indicated outcome results from a big acreage, rather than exceptional promise of yield per acre.

"The oats of 1917 promised and large- ly realized on September 1, is 1,538,000,- 000 bushels, within 6,000,000 bushels of the greatest previous crop. Condi- tions are reported 10 per cent above normal in Iowa and Missouri. In North Dakota, however, the crop promises only two-fifths, and in Montana less than half of a normal yield, while it is less than two-thirds in Washington and Oregon.

"The spring wheat report on Septem- ber 1, promises 250,000,000 bushels, 14,000,000 bushels more than on August 1, early threshing having shown heavier yield than anticipated in many sections, particularly in Minnesota, South Dakota and Iowa. The condi- tions in North Dakota as well as Mon- tana, Washington and Oregon remain poor from the effect of drought."

Other details of the report follow:

Spring Wheat—Condition 71.2 per cent of a normal, compared with 68.7 last month, 48.6 last year and 74, the 10-year average. Indicated acre yield, 13.1 bushels, compared with 8.8 last year and 15.4, the 1911-15 average.

WAITS ONLY ON SUPPLIES

Call Will Come When Equipment and Camp Accommodations Are Ready, Revealed by Statement.

Washington, Sept. 8.—Two million men in active service and in training camps by June 30, 1918 is the plan of the war department. Another draft of 500,000 men is planned for this winter, it became known from statements by Secretary Baker in a published report of proceedings from a congressional committee.

By October 10, the department ex- pects to have 1,500,000 under arms if sufficient equipment and accommoda- tion for more are obtained, another draft will be recommended to the presi- dent.

All the war department estimates asked by Baker were granted, on the assumption that the draft would be made.

WAR TAX SPLITS REPUBLICANS

Kenyon, Borah and Johnson Say They Will Stump New Hamp- shire for Hollis, Democrat, and Wealth Conscriptionist.

Washington, Sept. 8.—Whether great wealth or the masses of people should bear the burden of the war has split the Senate republicans wider than any- thing since the Bull Moose secession in 1912.

Advocates of wealth conscription an- nounced their intention today of stumping New Hamphire in a cam- paign for reelection of Henry F. Hollis, democrat, and wealth conscriptionist. Kenyon, Borah and Johnson will stump the state in 1919.

"We will do the same in every case," they said.

U. S. NEED NOT WORRY 'ALONG WITHOUT BULBS

Washington, Sept. 7.—America will receive the normal supply of Dutch bulbs, despite Holland's system of li- cense exports. A state department dis- patch today said a vessel carrying 25,- 000 cases of bulbs will sail from Rot- terdam soon.

ADVENTURES WITH A FORD

They are telling one on one of Klemme's young men who attended the State Fair at the Twin Cities last week. We do not vouch for the story, but we heard it as follows:

It seems as though one of the young men thought he would play a little joke and in the meantime have a little joy ride. The result was he swiped "Mr. Carr's" Ford and started down the pike. Naturally he had trouble, the little old Ford was not used to his untrained guidance, he had a variety of experiences, spark plug trouble, the dingfluddle would not hook up with the hoodeemaky, and various other things. It so greatly affected his delicate mind that when they gathered him up his mind was wandering and he was muttering the following, which we got from a St. Paul reporter:

"The Ford is my auto; I shall not want; It maketh me to lie down under it in green pastures; It leadeth me into much trouble; It draweth upon my purse. I go into the paths of death for it's sake, yea though I understand my Ford perfectly I fear much evil, for the radius rod or the axle might break, it has a blowout in the presence of mine enemies; I annoint the tires with a patch, the radiator boileth over. Surely this thing will not follow me all the days of my life, or I will dwell in the house of poverty forever."

A Hopeless Quest.

There is no such thing as perpetual motion outside of the works of God. Pursuit of it has been one of the vain quests of mankind, an unsolved problem among human vagaries, ending always in failure and often in insanity.

15 YEARS AND A DAY

By LOUISE OLIVER.

Mr. Badger came puffing up the street with as much effort and commotion as the 5:33 accommodation which he had just left smoking its way noisily to the next suburb.

On both sides of the street very comfortable looking frame houses, much terraced, had the appearance of two rows of soldiers marching sideways up very steep steps. Of course in summer this illusion was softened considerably by the trees from which the street derived its name. With all of its steepness and sameness, Maple lane had long been the harbor of "caste" in the little borough of Glenport, which was neither a glen nor a port, by the way.

About the sixth house up on the right side of the street was a house of indiscriminate brown, wide porches, a turreted effect on one side and a fountain.

Toward this house Charles Badger, plutocrat, now turned the tail of his eye, as he had every night, summer, winter and seasons in between, for a number of years. Sometimes it was only the flutter of a curtain, sometimes the opening of the front door to get the evening paper, in the spring it was the hyacinth and tulip beds that needed attention, but always when the 5:32 train came in there was evidence that Rosalind Murray was somewhere on the premises.

To go back a bit into the archives of Glenport: The Badgers and the Murrays had one time divided the honors of overlord. And in those days before Sylvester Murray had lost his fortune in the failure of the First National, the scion of one house was betrothed to the daughter of the other.

But when the Murray fortune was swept away, Althea Badger, Charles' mother, had taken her darling aside and showed him his duty, not to the girl he was to marry, but to her. So he had allowed Rosalind to withdraw from the contract when she also had insisted.

Years had rolled along and brought vacancies in both families. In fact, there was no one left at the Badgers' but Charles and none left at the Murrays' but Rosalind.

This evening Charles looked as usual when he was directly across from the gate. The tulip beds were gorgeous in their reds and yellows, the hyacinths in their purples and pinks. And from the shrubbery beside the house came the languorous perfume of lilacs. A bird perched on Cupid's good wing in the fountain suddenly let out a volley of joyous notes.

Charles paused to hear and to have a better view. Then he looked keenly around for Rosalind. He didn't see her. It was curious.

He turned again and went on, disappointed. It was unusual. He had learned to look for her and to count upon his evening greeting.

Again came the bird's call, and at the same instant a whiff of lilac made its way to Charles' nostrils. He was feeling very curious and, withal, lonely. He stopped again.

Still no sign of Rosalind.

Then he did an unusual thing, for somehow or other he seemed to have lost the power of will. His feet seemed to carry him forward without the least volition on his part. He stepped off the pavement, crossed the street and found himself opening the rusty iron gate and mounting the variously inclined steps to the house he had not visited for years.

The next instant he was ringing the bell and trying in vain to think of what excuse he should give when Rosalind opened the door.

But he need not have worried, for Rosalind didn't open the door. A stranger answered the bell, an older woman with sharp features, black dress and a gingham apron.

"Is Miss Murray at home?" inquired Charles, startled.

"Miss Murray doesn't live here any more," answered the woman. "She moved out today."

"Oh, yes, I see," stammered Charles turning to go. "I beg your pardon." Then: "She didn't say where she was going, did she?"

"No. She's going to be a nurse, I believe, but I don't know more than that. I've bought some of her things. I'm going to conduct a fashionable boarding house here, and I hope you won't mind mentioning it to your friends."

Through his brain were pounding the words, "Fifteen years and you've lost her, fifteen years and you've lost her. Fool! Fool!"

He reached the iron street gate at last and again turned heavily up the hill, the same words ringing in his brain.

Then he heard someone calling, and looking up he saw Rosalind coming down the steps of the house next door.

"I've been waiting to say good-by," she said quietly. "I'm going away, Charles, and may not see you again for a long, long while."

But Charles had her hand and held it, as if he would never let go. "No, you're not going away, Rosy, you're going to stay here and marry me this very day. I've got a duty to perform as well as you. I've got to spend the rest of my life trying to make you as happy as it's possible for a woman to be. Rosy," he pleaded, "don't go, I know I'll die if you do."

"Well, if it's to be my duty to save lives, Charles," she answered half seriously, "I suppose it may as well be yours."

MASON CITY, IOWA

NEWS FROM ALLIED TEMPERANCE COMMITTEE

Des Moines, Iowa, Sept. 13, 1917—With the date of the election on constitutional prohibition in Iowa set for October 15th, less than five weeks away, dry campaign leaders are lining up for their fresh drive.

W. G. Calderwood, of Washington, D. C., Secretary of the National Committee on War Time Prohibition, will arrive in Iowa for duty September 11, and will be active in campaign work from that time until the election.

Mr. Calderwood believes that the effect of the Iowa election upon the national is sufficiently important to justify his presence in the state.

Organization work under direction of the Allied Temperance committee is proceeding rapidly. More than one-third of the counties of the state are now lined up for work, and another score will be organized by next week.

Every effort is being devoted to getting out as large a vote as is possible. Dry leaders believe that lack of interest is the chief danger.

A "School house" campaign may be organized by Mr. Calderwood and the Allied Temperance Committee, in an effort to reach as large a number of voters directly as possible. The drys believe that the maximum wet strength in Iowa is not to exceed 175,000 votes, and that the full strength will be at the polls. To win the election it will be necessary, therefore, to get at least 350,000 votes out, this vote being not much less than that cast at an average off year state election.

No Need of Explanation.

Mother had gone out for a few minutes, and when she returned a portion of the dinner was slightly burned. In dismay she said to her husband: "It is too bad it happened, but it will have to be served anyway. I'll explain to them and apologize." Jennie overheard and remarked soothingly: "Don't feel bad about it, mother. You won't have to explain to them—they can taste it's burnt theirselves."

Keep Cheerful.

Be cheerful in the struggle to measure up your ideal. Fight your faults with sunshine. Self-improvement is the big business of life, it is true, but you will succeed all the better if you mix song and laughter with your efforts. If you are really trying to be good, you are bound to be successful, and that is a reason for going at it with bright faces and light hearts.—Exchange.

Military Discipline.

Pay attention to the discipline of your army. One month's relaxation will cause mischief which can be repaired only by six months of incessant care. It is not by placing your forces everywhere, but by making them move about that you will guard all points. This manner of dispersing the army is fatal to discipline and order.—Napoleon.

Killing Hunger.

According to an Italian physician, the channel from the mouth to the stomach is the seat of the senses of hunger and thirst, which he claims to have suppressed by cocaine injections.

HOME TOWN HELPS

CITY PLANNING FOR FRANCE

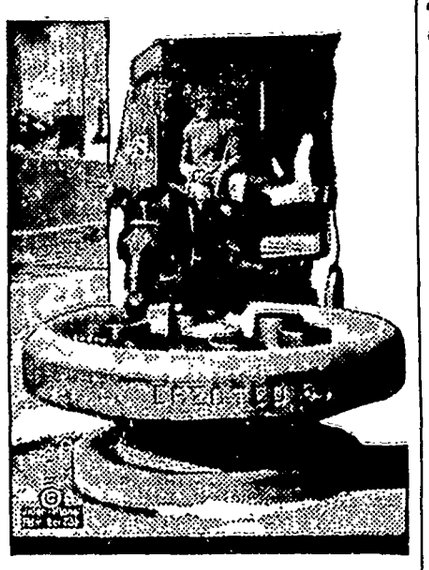
Some Good to Result From Destruction of Towns by Bombardment of the German Armies.

There is no great loss, according to homely philosophy, without some slight gain. Great disasters often lead to better conditions. The old fable of the phoenix rising from its ashes is essentially true.

France is to profit by the ruin of so many of her cities. So her people have decreed. When the German armies are driven from her soil, her maimed towns are to be rebuilt. But they will not be reconstructed along former lines. The narrow streets will not be restored. The buildings centuries old, picturesque, perhaps, but scarcely sanitary, will not be restored. Reims and other bombarded cities are to be rebuilt according to the latest plans of experts in city planning. They are to be models on which cities untouched by German cannonades will look with envy.

But that is not all. France has decided that she cannot afford in future to allow towns and cities to grow up in the old haphazard way. A law has been adopted which compels every municipality to organize a planning commission, which will decide on its future growth. Every improvement will have to conform to the city plan, whether it is made in newly developed territory, or replaces a construction of long standing. Paris, having outgrown the Haussmann plans, has organized a bureau which will care not only for the city, but for the whole metropolitan area.

INDIVIDUAL CUPS FOR HORSES.



This is one of a number of drinking fountains for horses, with individual cups, erected by the Pennsylvania Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to animals.

TRACTORS ARE USED BY CITY

Buffalo Declared to Have Best Garbage Collection System by Boston Investigating Committee.

Buffalo has the best new garbage collection plan according to three engineers that Mayor Curley of Boston sent to other cities to find out which had the best one in operation. The engineer's report describes the Buffalo system briefly as follows:

"The city is divided into districts of such size that four horse-drawn vehicles will handle the garbage, ashes or refuse, picking it up from the houses. These four vehicles after filling are pulled to a central point from which a tractor takes them on the long haul to the reduction plant, or dump, as the case may be. In this way the short haul with frequent stops is taken care of by horses, while for the long haul the tractor is used taking several trailers. Care in routing vehicles would be necessary to get full advantage of the tractors and keep them constantly working. These tractors cost about $5,000 apiece and the trailers about $1,500. For a city of the size of Boston the first expense for this scheme might be $250,000, and considerably study would be required to assure its economy."

Garbage Dumps Unsanitary.

Not a few cities dump their garbage upon plots of land located usually in outskirts of the city. This is not disposal at all, but simply the placing or removal of filth from one locality to another. One health authority has this to say in regard to dumping garbage on the outskirts:

"Whole groups of zymotic diseases are traceable to ground conditions. When, as in some parts, soils are composed of an accumulation of decaying matters from the city, the building of houses over it may conceal but cannot destroy the contamination. More or less of the foul air must find its way out of the soil and endanger the health of the people living upon it."

A Hint for Gardeners.

In city and town gardens, where the space is restricted, it is best to have the rows run the long way of the garden—north to south if possible to prevent the growing plants from shading each other and planting several kinds of similarly growing vegetables like [illegible] onions, carrots, radishes, etc., one row.

CRISIS OF WOMAN'S LIFE

Change Safely Passed by Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Wagoner, Okla.—"I never get tired of praising Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound because during Change of Life I was in bed two years and had two operations, but all the doctors and operations did me no good, and I would have been in my grave today had it not been for Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound which brought me out of it all right, so I am now well and do all my housework, besides working in my garden. Several of my neighbors have got well by taking Lydia E. Such warning symptoms as sense of suffocation, hot flashes, headaches, backaches, dread of impending evil, timidity, sounds in the ears, palpitation of the heart, sparks before the eyes, irregularities, constipation, variable appetite, weakness and dizziness should be heeded by middle-aged women. The DESTROYER

By BURTON E. STEVENSON

(CHAPTER TWELVE—Continued.)

"I believe I was thinking about it," Dan admitted, and got out his pipe; but he had himself been scarcely conscious of the thought, and it amazed him that she should have detected it. There was the flare of a match, and he sat back again, exhaling a long puff. "Now," he said, "you are going to begin my education. I am ready for the first lesson."

"How shall I begin?"

"I think an excellent way would be to tell me something about yourself," he suggested.

She considered him gravely.

"Are you really in earnest?" she asked.

"Indeed I am," he answered quickly, coloring a little under her searching eyes. "Forgive me if I seemed not to be. And please begin in any way you think best."

"I will tell you something about Poland," she said, "and then you will understand a little what I and all like me feel for America. You know, I suppose, that there is no longer any such land as Poland?"

"I know that Russia and one or two other powers divided it, about 100 years ago."

"Yes; but you cannot know what that division meant! The Poles were a brave and patriotic people, they loved their country as few peoples do, and all at once, great armies were flung upon them; they were overwhelmed, and their country was taken away. They lost more than their country: they lost their language, their history, their national life. But in spite of it all, they remained Poles.

"I was born in Russian Poland, not far from Warsaw. From the very first, I was taught that I was a Pole, not a Russian. But only at home, under my own roof, could I be a Pole. The teaching of Polish was forbidden in any school—every word spoken must be Russian. If children were overheard talking in Polish, they were arrested by the police and their parents summoned and fined. On every public building there was a painted notice. 'It is forbidden to speak Polish.' All trials were conducted in Russian, although none of the peasants understood Russian, and so had no idea of what was being said. No official was permitted to answer a question in Polish—I have known a tramcar conductor to be heavily fined for doing so.

"We were taught history in which the name of our fatherland was never mentioned, but where Russia was treated as the wisest, best, and most powerful of nations, with the czar second only to God himself. We could not leave our native village without permission from the police. No Pole could fill any public office. No Pole was permitted to publish a book or a newspaper or even a handbill, until a Russian censor had passed upon it. If you ever visit Poland, you will notice, here and there, groups of tall wooden crosses. They mark graves. But if one of those crosses decays or falls down, it may not be replaced without permission from the government. One night, the cross over the grave of my father's mother was struck by lightning; and for two years it lay there, until permission to replace it had come from Petersburg. It was among such surroundings that my childhood was passed."

Kasia did not seem to realize that, instead of telling about Poland, she was telling about herself; and Dan was deeply moved. He had listened, in his day, to many stories, but never to one like this. It was as though the dead wrappings of history were stripped away, and its seething, desperate, tragic heart laid bare.

"Go on," he said thickly, and folded his arms tightly across his breast.

"My father had hoped to be a student of science," she went on; "but he was refused admission to the university because of some absurd suspicion, and after that he could study only secretly. When he married, he rented a little farm near Warsaw; and there he and mother toiled all day long, and the children too, as soon as they were old enough. There were four children—two boys and two girls. I was the youngest. Twice every year, my mother, my sister and I walked in to Warsaw, and spent a week there helping to clean the streets; this service was required of all families in the villages about Warsaw, and could be escaped only by paying a heavy tax. We had also to assist in keeping the roads in repair, and for this, too, the women and children were employed, since the men could not be spared from the work of the farm. At nightfall we were always exhausted, and would swallow our soup and black bread hastily, and then fling ourselves down, dressed as we were, on a heap of straw in one corner. We were very poor, and yet not so poor as we seemed, but to have added one little comfort to our home would have meant a visit from the tax-inquisitor, and perhaps a search. The only way to escape this was to live in miserable poverty.

"In spite of all this, my father still kept up his studies. At night, after carefully closing the shutters and stuffing the cracks with rags, so that no ray of light could be seen outside, he would light a little tallow dip and sit reading for hours. He read the same books over and over, for books were very hard to get. The ones he wanted were almost always forbidden. To be found possessing one meant banishment. So all of his books he kept concealed even more carefully than he did his money. Indeed, he valued them more!

"Sundays he devoted to the education of his children, always with one of us on guard outside the door. It was then that I learned to read English. Father had taught himself with great thoroughness, because he was determined some day to go to America. America—that was his dream! But how to get there! It seemed certain that he could never save money enough to pay for so many. That problem was soon to be settled."

She paused and put her hand to her throat, shivering a little.

"Are you cold?" Dan asked.

"No; I am trembling at the thought of what remains to tell. A case of cholera appeared in our village. It was reported to the magistrate. At once all the Russian officials removed to Warsaw, and a cordon of Russian troops was thrown about the village. No one was permitted to enter or to leave. The cholera spread. The people were ignorant; they did not know what to do, and there was no one to tell them; they could only wait and pray. At the end of a month, the disease had spent itself, but of those who had lived in the village, only one in 10 remained. Of our family, there were left only my father and myself."

Dan's hand went out to hers. She did not draw away.

"For a time," she went on, father was stunned by the blow; I have always believed that he was very near madness. But he shook off his sorrow and decided that the time had come to seek America. We could not depart openly; that was not permitted; so one night he dug up the little hoard of money he had concealed, cut off my hair and dressed me in boys' clothes, arrayed himself in the rags of a goat herd, and about midnight we set off. I was 11 years old at the time, and I remember every incident distinctly. We could travel only at night, hiding at every sound. By day, we concealed ourselves under culverts, in ditches, under heaps of brush. Luckily, Polish people are eager to help each other, so we did not starve, and we got forward a little every night. At the end of six weeks, we crossed the frontier and were safe.

"There is not much more to tell. We reached New York; and I was placed in school—I wish you could realize all that meant to me! For a long time, I could not go out into the street without being afraid. It seemed impossible that there was no longer anything to fear. When at last I understood, it was as though a great load were lifted. That was 10 years ago. For the past three years, I have been a teacher in the Hester street school."

She sat silent for a moment; then with a long breath, drew her hand away.

"Do you wonder that I love America?" she asked.

"No," said Dan; "and you have made me a better patriot."

She turned to him, with a little smile.

"And now I think of it," she added, "it was my story I told you, after all!"

"Your story helps me to understand Poland's. That is the way history should be written."

"I think so, too. There is not enough in most histories of the common people. And my father says it is only they who really matter. He has thought very deeply. It is his dream to make all other countries like America — free, peaceful, industrious—only better than America has yet become, in that poverty and inequality and injustice will be abolished."

"A magnificent dream," Dan agreed with a smile; "but impossible of accomplishment, I'm afraid."

"No, it is not impossible!" she cried quickly. "It will be accomplished, and by him!"

Dan looked at her curiously. Her eyes were blazing, and she spoke with a conviction, with an enthusiasm, which puzzled him.

"Tell me something about your father," he suggested. "You said he was the most wonderful man in the world."

"And I meant it. Could anything be more wonderful than to force all the nations of the earth to break up their navies, to dismantle their forts, to disband their armies? Could anything be more wonderful than to put an end, once for all, to this waste of life and treasure, which is eating at the heart of the world? Could anything be more wonderful than to turn all these armies of useless men back into honest and useful labor? Then no longer would you see women gathering the harvest, or struggling under cruel burdens, or cleaning the streets, or spreading manure over the fields! No, nor walking the pavements of the cities! Would you not say that the man who brought all this about was a wonderful man?"

"Wonderful!" echoed Dan. "Why, wonderful would be no name for it! But it is something that no man can ever do."

"It will be done, believe me," she said, solemnly, "and by my father"

Dan could only stare at her. It seemed absurd to suppose that she could be in earnest, but certainly her face was earnest to solemnity. It shone with consecration.

"But I don't understand," he stammered. "It's too big for me. How is it to be accomplished? How can one man bring it about? I can see how the czar or kaiser might set to work, but even they could not hope to succeed. The czar did try something of the sort, didn't he?"

"Yes, but he was not in earnest, and the other nations laughed. At my father they will not laugh, for he is in deadly earnest. As to how this is to be done, I may not tell you, not yet some day, perhaps. But one thing I may tell you, and it is this—my father holds the nations of the world in the hollow of his hand"

For a moment there was silence between them. The moon had risen as they talked, and the dark sea was illumined by a broad path of silver. The boatdeck was almost deserted, the snapping of the wireless had ceased. Miss Vard looked about her with a little start

"It must be very late," she said. "I must be going."

As Dan followed her across the deck, he noticed a dark figure on the bench next to the one where he and Miss Vard had sat. And as they passed, the stranger struck a match and lighted a cigaret By the glare of the flam, Dan saw that it was his roommate, Chevrial.

CHAPTER XIII.

IN THE WIRELESS HOUSE.

Fritz Ludwig, the tall, blond young man who earned his 80 marks per month as wireless man on the Ottilie, having eaten his dinner with the passengers of the second cabin and smoked a meditative pipe at the door of the little coop on the after boat deck which served him as office and bedroom, knocked out the ashes and entered his citadel to prepare for the night's business. But first he connected up his detectors and snapped the receivers against his ears, just to see what might be going on. The operator on the Adriatic, 100 miles behind them, was gossiping with Poldhu, and far ahead two boats were exchanging information about the weather. Then Ludwig glanced up quickly, for a step had sounded at the door, and he saw a man just stepping over the threshold.

"No admittance here!" he called sharply; but the man advanced another step, smiling broadly.

"My dear Fritz!" he said in German. "Do you not know me?"

And Fritz, staring upwards, and seeing his visitor's face clearly, tore off the receivers, sprang to his feet and saluted.

"Admiral Pachmann!" he gasped.

Pachmann laughed. Then he turned, closed the door, and drew the shade before the window.

"Yes, it is I; but don't shout it so loudly, Fritz. Let us sit down. I saw you at dinner tonight—yes, I, too, am of the second class!—and I trembled lest you might recognize me and shout my name out in just that fashion. So, as soon as I could, I hastened up to warn you. I am travelling incognito upon official business, and in public you are not to know me."

"I understand, Herr Admiral," said Fritz. "I shall be most careful."

"It is most important," Pachmann warned him; "and I shall trust you not to forget. How do you like your work here?"

"Very well, sir. I find it very interesting."

"I shall have you back in the service, nevertheless, one of these days," Pachman said. "Perhaps sooner than you think," he added.

"I am always ready, sir," said Fritz.

Pachmann drew out a cigar and lighted it.

"Go ahead with your work," he said. "There is no music to me so pleasant as the snapping of the spark."

Fritz laughed.

"I know that, sir," he said. "I have an extra receiver, if you care to put it on."

"Yes, give it to me," said the admiral; and in a moment it, too, was connected with the detector.

Fritz replaced his own, started his converter and snapped out into the air the signal which told the waiting world that the operator of the Ottilie was ready to receive anything it might have to communicate. Almost at once Southampton answered, and there was a little preliminary tuning, till the signals came clear and strong. Then Fritz drew a pad toward him picked up a freshly sharpened pencil, and told Southampton to go ahead.

"Sn three fr DKA," began Southampton. "Time 9:50 G."

Which meant that Southampton had for the Prinzsessin Ottilie three messages and that the time was 9:50 o'clock Greenwich.

Fritz glanced at the clock above his desk.

"Time OK. GA," he signalled, the "GA" being radio for "Go ahead."

"MSG one," went on Southampton. "Eight w Gary. DKA. Directors have command of situation. Morrissy.

"MSG two. Nine w Gardenshire, KDA. Missed boat will follow by Carmania. Hickle.

"MSG three. Eleven w Hodges, DKA. Coffee will go 13 Thursday shall I sell. Perkins."

Fritz had taken it all down with religious care. At the last word he snapped open his key.

"OK. Thanks GN," he ticked off, the "GN" being, of course, "goodnight."

He waited a moment, but there were no other calls for the Ottilie, and he took off his receiver. Pachmann followed suit.

"That was a great pleasure," said the latter. "The signals are very clear tonight."

"If you could come in later on, sir," Fritz suggested, "you could hear the news service from Poldhu. There is a station for you!"

"At what hour does the service start?" asked Pachman.

"Poldhu always calls at 11:30, sir, and starts the news service as soon as the commercial business is out of the way."

"I shall try to be here," said Pachmann. "This long distance service is a great delight to me, especially when it works so clearly as it does tonight. You will not forget about my incognito?"

"I shall not forget, sir," Fritz assured him, and with a short nod, Pachmann left the house. Fritz sat down again to copy out his messages and to send three or four which the captain's steward at that moment brought in. That done, he thrust his head out for a breath of air, noticed with a grin the couples who had already discovered the advantages of the boat deck benches, and then went back to his key for a little gossip with such other Marconi men as might be within reach. It was nearly 11:30, and all of them were sitting at their tables, waiting for the far flung signal which would tell that the operator at Poldhu, that lonely station on the last sheer cliff of Cornwall, was ready for his night's work. And a minute later, the door opened and Pachmann came in.

"I could not resist your invitation, Fritz," he said. "This gets into one's blood," and he adjusted the extra receiver and sat down.

WHOLE WORLD FEELS ADVANCE IN PRICES

Compilations of New York Bank Show This Country Does Not Suffer Alone.

The advances in prices, so generally realized by all the people of the United States, is by no means peculiar to this country, or even to the countries which war conditions are looked to as the immediate cause of the high prices. From the tea fields of Java, India, the tin mines of the Malay Peninsula, the silk areas of China and Japan, the sugar fields of Java, Hawaii and Cuba, the sisal plantations of Yucatan, the copper fields of South America and Japan, the indigo farms of India, the hemp fields of the Philippines, logwood forests of the West Indies, currant orchards of Greece, the rubber plantations of the Congo, the champagne producing area of France, the cotton fields of Egypt and even the diamond mines of South Africa, statistical proof of advances in prices of their respective products.

A compilation by the National bank of New York of the prices at which varied products of these widely distributed areas are being sold in the places of production, shows that the advance in prices is general

The United States has peculiarities for determining the prices of the world products in their respective places of production. Her customs laws require that the valuations on which merchandise is imported shall be those of the merchandise in the country from which exported to the United States and not the value on reaching the port at which it enters this country. Thus the values named by the importers of any article, from any part of the world, must be the price at which the good were sold in the place from which exported to this country, and the importer does not choose to name the price which he paid for it, then the average price of the article in the wholesale markets of the port from which it was shipped to this country is used in determining the value

So it is quite feasible to determine the average price at which any given article or class of articles is sold in the country from which imported, and at the same time determine the average world export price, by comparing the total quality of all the importations of the article in question with the total valuation placed upon it by the importers of the entire quantity If, for instance, you want to know the price at which the coffee reaching the United States from Brazil in any given month was exported from that country to get at least a close approximation of the average price by dividing the stated quantity into the stated value. To if you want to determine the price at which the coffee of Columbia left that country you do so by comparing quantities and value of the Columbia coffee imported and find the average price of the Columbia or Venezuela Central American coffees higher than the average Brazil.

If you want, however, to determine the price of all coffees imported in the latest available months with the same month two or three or four years ago you do this by taking the total quantity imported and comparing it with the stated value of the entire quantity, and you get the average world price per pound of coffee at the place of export to the United States for the year in question. By a similar process you determine the price in place of production of any of the thousands of articles imported into the United States, provided always that the import figures name both quantity and stated value, for the valuation is in all cases that at the port or country whence shipped to the United States.

Such comparisons show in a very large proportion of the cases marked increases in the values, at the place of production, of the merchandise brought into the country. Raw cotton, for example, most of it from Egypt, was imported in March, 1917, at an average price of 31.8c per pound, against 12c in March, 1914, a date immediately preceding the war, and these, be it remembered, represent the export price at the port or country from which sent us. Sisal imports in March of the current year were $202 per ton against $117 in March, 1914; copper, 29.5c per pound, against 14.1c three years earlier goat skins, 62.2c per pound, against 25.7c three years earlier cheese at an average of 34c per pound, against 17.3c flax seed at $2.39 per bushel, against $1.29½; beans at $3.21 per bushel against $1.56; potatoes at $1.77, against three years ago; indigo at $2.00 per pound, against 15c per pound in the same months in 1914; logwood at $30 per ton, against $11.00; combing wool 42c, against 24.6c in March, 1914; hides at 6.5c per pound, against 3c; copper 29.5c, against 14.1c three years ago; cotton stockings at $3.27 per dozen pairs against $1.27 in March, 1914; sugar exactly double the price of three years ago; currants at an advance of 300 per cent; while cattle hides, manila hemp, raw silk, Indian rubber, tin, lumber, cotton and woolen cloth, and many other articles show advances, some of them as much as 100 per cent. Wood pulp mechanically ground, shows an average import price in March, 1917, $30.73 per ton, against $16.35 in March, 1914; chemical pulp unbleached, $86 per ton, against $36.75, and chemical pulp bleached, $133.11 per ton, against $49.20 in 1914. All of these advances occur in the price at which the merchandise in question was sold in the country from which exported to the United States.

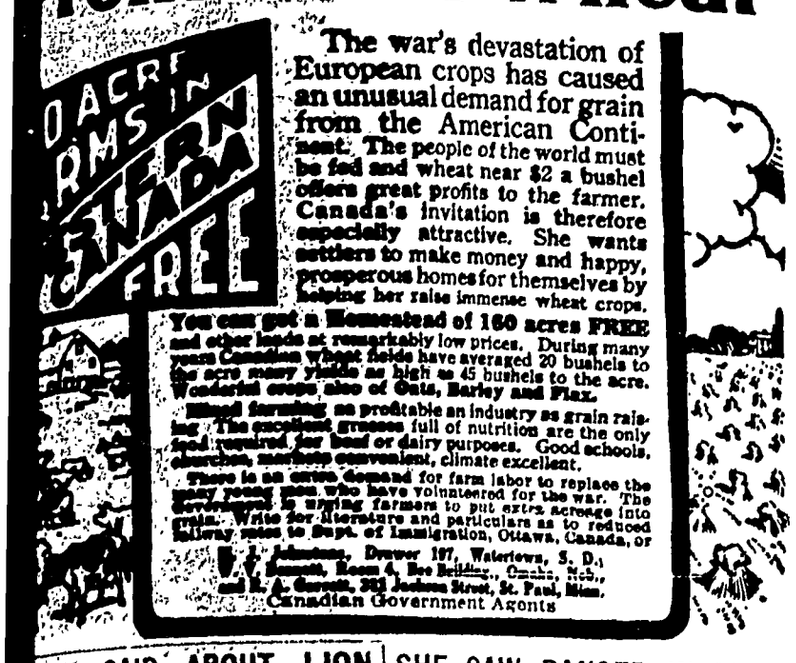
A BRITISH VIEW OF WILSON.

From the Public.

Perhaps the best substitute for a historical perspective on men and events of our times is the perspective of distance. Frank Smith is an outstanding figure among British democrats. He is a labor leader, an agitator and a politician of the best sort. In a letter to one of the editors of the Public, written on July 4, at London, he says: "You will be glad to know that every utterance of Wilson is followed here both closely and sympathetically. His influence is remarkable. Everyone feels he is a straight man, and even when he goes to war is no jingo. I don't think any American leader, since Lincoln has ever gripped the imagination of Britain as Wilson has done. He seems to have brought to many timid folk a feeling of security, not only as regards the terrible business now going on, but when peace shall be possible. Truly, with the hour came the man."

anadian Farmers rofit From Wheat



The war's devastation of European crops has caused an unusual demand for grain from the American Continent. The people of the world must be fed and wheat near $2 a bushel offers great profits to the farmer. Canada's invitation is therefore especially attractive. She wants settlers to make money and happy, prosperous homes for themselves by helping her raise immense wheat crops.

You can get a Homestead of 160 acres FREE and other lands at remarkably low prices. During many years Canadian wheat fields have averaged 20 bushels to the acre—many yields as high as 45 bushels to the acre. Wonderful crops also of Oats, Barley and Flax.

Mixed farming as profitable an industry as grain raising. The excellent grasses full of nutrition are the only feed required for beef or dairy purposes. Good schools, churches, markets convenient, climate excellent.

There is an extra demand for farm labor to replace the many young men who have volunteered for the war. The Government is urging farmers to put extra acreage into grain. Write for literature and particulars as to reduced railway rates to Supt. of Immigration, Ottawa, Canada, or

SAVE COST OF COLD.

From the Toledo News-Bee.

Why not reduce expenses by cutting out the h. c. of your annual cold?

If you are a person of normal health you probably manage to keep well up to Christmas, and then you succumb to a cold, or to the grip, or bronchitis, or tonsilitis or influenza.

Common colds have been estimated to cost the population of certain states $5,000,000 a year. Really, considering the advanced prices of medicine, and the wages lost, only the well to do can afford to catch cold.

There are two ways of cutting the high cost of colds for your own sake and of proving yourself a public benefactor as well.

Avoid exposure to infection when a member of the family brings a germ cold into the house, and if you catch a cold, sneeze and cough behind your handkerchief and avoid infecting others.

Drink two quarts of water a day, sleep with your bedroom windows wide open, never mind the snow outside, cover up, sit, stand and walk erect and walk every day in the open air, keep clean, eat slowly and do not eat too much. The Christmas feast is responsible for many a hard cold.

Build up your vitality and your physical resistance and taking cold will cease to be a part of your yearly history.

A Constitutional For Baby.

From Physical Culture.

A baby's feet, all very much of an animal's [illegible] has not yet developed any degree of mental life, at least in the first few [illegible]. And the normal state of all young [illegible] life is activity.

Give the baby a chance. Most mothers don't. They keep the poor little thing in the carriage practically all day. They get exercise for themselves in pushing the carriage. But I've wonder why the baby won't eat cabbage and doesn't grow. It is largely because it stays in the carriage, sitting there like a crippled old woman all day long. If they would only put the child down on the floor now and then they would begin to see a difference.

The first lesson for every mother to learn is to give the baby a chance to exercise by placing it upon its stomach. The prone position is the natural position of all forms of life—worms, insects, reptiles, mammals, birds. The fish under is about the only exception I know of, and he is only a flock fish, for the flounder goes belly down [illegible] a baby. But the human baby [illegible] thing is very carefully and upon [illegible] in defiance of the rule in all [illegible]. Then the child may kick its legs and wave its arms when on the back [illegible] too much restricted with clothing. But there is nothing like the exercise against real resistance which a baby secures when placed upon its stomach and allowed to struggle with its own weight.

A Pastor Scored Novels.

Several hundred [illegible] the other day to [illegible] George B. Th[illegible] voiced at the [illegible] Adventists here [illegible] and novel writers [illegible] the deity in the [illegible].

Pastor Thompson [illegible] the North American [illegible] of the Seventh Day Adventists stated that the bible very clearly condemns the reading of fictitious stories. He stated that unless the readers of novels and the writers repented they would undoubtedly be destroyed.

"Both those who love lies and those who make them are on the way to eternal fire," said Pastor Thompson. "Let us read our bibles and good books and leave the novels severely alone."

Books of fiction are nothing but written lies. Therefore they very clearly fall under the wrath of God as do the ones who write them and the ones who read them.

His Mother's Son.

He has gone to join the fightin', leavin mother here an' me—
I hadn't much chanst days gone by to study jogafee,
So my mind is ruther hazy about where our boy has gone
But his ma showed me a paper that some jogafer had drawn
And we started where we re livin', and we crossed a lot o' land,
And we went acrost an ocean, me aholdin' of her hand
And a-follerin the finger of the other hand that went Over land and over ocean to where he has pitched his tent

And where he will do his fightin' fer to make all people free,
And I hope that God forgives the pride
his mother feels and me
When we think of him way yonder straight and tall and clean and true,
Helpin do the things his country has been called upon to do
We was always proud, I reckon, sence he was a little tad—
The days he was born his comin' made our hearts so full and glad
That my heart swole when I looked down in his mother's smilin' face
And I went and told the critters, every critter on the place

An he'd lay in a clothes basket on a pillow in the shade
Of a tree, his ma beside him an' the furrows that I made
Was the crookedest I reckon that a feller ever drew,
For no matter where I started they would work back to them two!
And I'd kiss the baby's mother and I'd hug the baby, then
I would say giddap and start in on my plowin' once again,
Only to come back to love them at the end of every row—
I B'LEEVE there's a heaven yonder, but
I KNOW there's one below.

Then he growed and went to college when the dcestrict school was done,
Went off there to study farmin', an' went at it like 'twas fun!
Then he showed me about farmin'—I had farmed since I was growed,
But his knowledge made me wonder at the little that I knowed
And that I had got by with, and then he heard his country's call
And he bent and kissed his mother and shook hands with me, and all
Of the farm seems strange without him,
and as lonesome as can be,
But we're prouder now than ever of our boy, his ma and me.

For if he had been a slacker—not that he COULD have been that—
And had let the others battle whilst he skulked where he was at—
We'd have thought that we was failures, and that we had lived in vain—
We can stand his loss, I reckon; stand the sorrow and the pain
If the Lord does send that to us; and go heads up just the same;
For there is a pride in sorrow, but there
ain't no pride in shame,
And we couldn't have stood that, and,
thank the Lord, we don't have to!
Bein' the son of his mother made him loyal, brave and true.

WOMEN! IT IS MAGIC! LIFT OUT ANY CORN

Apply a few drops then lift corns or calluses off with fingers—no pain.

Just think! You can lift off any corn or callus without pain or soreness.

A Cincinnati man discovered this ether compound and named it freezone. Any druggist will sell a tiny bottle of freezone, like here shown, for very little cost. You apply a few drops directly upon a tender corn or callus. Instantly the soreness disappears, then shortly you will find the corn or callus so loose that you can lift it right off.

Freezone is wonderful. It dries instantly. It doesn't eat away the corn or callus, but shrivels it up without even irritating the surrounding skin.

Hard, soft or corns between the toes, as well as painful calluses, lift right off. There is no pain before or afterwards. If your druggist hasn't freezone, tell him to order a small bottle for you from his wholesale drug house.—adv.

Feed the Fighters! Win the War!!

Harvest the Crops — Save the Yields

On the battle fields of France and Flanders, the United States boys and the Canadian boys are fighting side by side to win for the World the freedom that Prussianism would destroy. While doing this they must be fed and every ounce of muscle that can be requisitioned must go into use to save this year's crop. A short harvest period requires the combined forces of the two countries in team work, such as the soldier boys in France and Flanders are demonstrating.

The Combined Fighters in France and Flanders and the Combined Harvesters in America WILL Bring the Allied Victory Nearer.

A reciprocal arrangement for the use of farm workers has been perfected between the Department of the Interior of Canada and the Departments of Labor and Agriculture of the United States, under which it is proposed to permit the harvesters that are now engaged in the wheat fields of Oklahoma, Kansas, Iowa, North Dakota, South Dakota, Nebraska, Minnesota and Wisconsin to move over into Canada, with the privilege of later returning to the United States, when the crops in the United States have been conserved, and help to save the enormous crops in Canada which by that time will be ready for harvesting.

SHE SAW DANGER IN DELAY

Owing to Circumstances, Fair Maid Was Willing to Make Momentous Decision at Once.

"Harry," she began, in asweet, timorous voice, what's all this talk about gold and silver?"

Henry, who reads the papers, and was about as thoroughly ignorant on the subject as everybody else, plunged in bravely, but she stopped him.

"I don't want to know about that," she faltered, "but is gold getting so awful scarce?"

"Awful scarce?" echoed Henry, dismally.

And is it all being taken away to pay for the war?"

"It is," said Henry.

"And if they continued to take it away, there won't be any left in this country by and by and we'll have to use silver?"

"Yes," sighed Henry.

"Henry," she whispered, "I told you I would give you my decision in the summer but I repent. It—it is 'Y yes.' Henry don't don't you think," she continued after a moment's silence, "that it would be well to get the ring now before all the gold is taken away?"—London Answers.

A Loss.

"The coal barons and the steel barons promise to give the people a square deal during war time but I guess there's no danger of their going too far and robbing themselves in the people's behalf."

The speaker was Samuel Gompers.

"Yes," he went on, "there's no danger of their acting like the young lady at the shore who said to her father:

"'Papa, I lost my heart on the moonlit beach last night, and accepted old Rake Hardduppe. Poor Rake is no longer young, I know, but as I said, I've lost my heart.'

"'Humph,' snorted her father. 'I think it's your head that you've lost.'"

Enjoyed the Fight.

Mike was home wounded from the front and he was stopped by a friend one day as he was hobbling down the street on his newly acquired crutches.

"And how did you get on in the big battle?" asked the friend, gazing with compassion on the gallant soldier's useless limb.

"Sure, Oi had the toime of me loife," replied Mike, decidedly.

"But you got very badly knocked about," retorted the other.

"Yes, Oi know that,' cried Mike, enthusiastically; "but, begorra, it was the first fight I was ever in that the police didn't stop."

Food Control.

"What'll you have for breakfast sir?" asked the waiter.

"Oh, some melon, an omelet a rasher of bacon, waffles and maple sirup and coffee with cream."

"Yes, sir. All we can let you have is a couple of biscuits and a bit of salt fish. We always give a guest an opportunity to give his regular order. It pleases his mind while it's going on and gives us an idea of what kind of a tip to expect."

Saw It Already.

"When you have served your term, my poor friend, I hope you will see the error of your ways," said the prison visitor.

"Dat I will, mum! In fact, I've already seen the error of me ways."

"I'm glad to hear you say so."

"Dere ain't no use pickin' pockets when big hauls kin be made in second-story work."

The Sentry.

Melvin Lostutter, formerly a reporter on a Columbus newspaper, is now in the United States marines, somewhere off the coast of South Carolina. He sends back the story of a green sentry who was on duty a few nights ago.

Three persons appeared in the darkness, and in true military style the sentry demanded:

"Halt! Who goes there?"

"Captain, wife and child," was the answer of the officer the sentry had stopped.

"Advance, captain, to be recognized," commanded the sentry. "Mark time, wife and child."—Indianapolis News.

One on the Doctor.

The following anecdote is carefully preserved by a family whose Scotch ancestors took a rise out of the lexicographer:

Hostess—Doctor Johnson, what do you think of our Scotch broth?

Doctor Johnson—Madam, in my opinion it's only fit for pigs.

Hostess—Then have some more.

"Buying Liberty bonds?"

"Yep; still paying alimony."—Yale Record.

The Boy Prude.

Representaitve La Guardia of Michigan was praising the president's Flag day oration.

"How well he speaks out against the German militaristic autocracy!" said Mr. La Guardia. "Every true Democrat must speak out against that hydra. To use soft words about it is to be weak and silly and mistaken—like the little boy prude.

"A little boy prude, having eaten too many sour cherries, was taken ill in school, and began to groan and writhe.

"'What's the matter?' said the pretty teacher. 'What's the matter, Tommy?'

"The boy answered in an embarrassed voice:

"'I've got a terrible pain in my—my abandon.'"

Most Pressing Need.

Edith had been ill and mother had been coaxing her to eat.

"Will you have an orange, dear?"

"No."

"Won't you have some ice cream?"

"No, no."

The questioning continued. Finally a weary little voice piped: "I'll tell you what I will have, mother."

"What, darling?" eagerly.

"A rest."

Jay Houchins' Luck.

It was a lucky thing for Jay Houchins of Ashburn when some turnip seed got mixed with clover seed last fall. He sowed the combination over his wheat in February and reaped the reward last week when the wheat was cut. Here and there across the fields could be seen the turnip tops, and the result was that wheat shockers ate turnips as they worked, and Mr. Houchins did not have to feed them any regular meals.—Kansas City Times.

County Loyalty Day At Garner A Succsss

Courtesy The Garner Signal

Loyalty Day was certainly celebrated properly by the people of Hancock county yesterday in this city. The day was perfect from early morning until late at night. A more beautiful day was never known Two-thirds of the people of the county were here, incoming trains were packed and auto loads came by the thousand. The procesions from all the towns in the county and even those over the border were all that anyone could hope for No one interested in the planning of this demonstration ever expected that every little part of the day's doings would be carried out so completely. At an early hour the crowds began to arrive from all parts of the county and found Garner ready to receive them. The city was decorated from one end to the other. By 10 o'clock the streets were thronged with people and at 10.30 a big patriotic parade was formed at the court house and proceeded north to the Milwaukee tracks and back to the starting point.

The procession was led by W. G Barnes, marshal of the day. Then followed Uncle Sam, a car carrying the president of the day and the speakers, Mason City buglers, the old soldiers on foot and in cars, the D A R float, the Britt band, the young men who leave tomorrow and on October 3rd to enter the service, a car containing a gentleman representing the President of the United States, Harold Livermore who was at home from a naval training school, and Private Curtis, whos home is at Britt, is stationed at Camp Dodge, the Goddess of Liberty, the Corwith band, a company of high school girls dressed as Red Cross nurses, school boys and girls, a Red Cross float, more school girls carrying flags, the Mason City Boy Scout Drum Corps, the Britt Boy Scouts and Camp Fire Girls, the Kanawha band, a float of Sammies, another representing the Spirit of 1917 and another the Spirit of 1776, a Red Cross float, the Garner band, another Red Cross float representing preparedness, a float representing unpreparedness, another float showing the spirit of those who must stay at home, a Klemme float, the Bailey Drum Corps from Britt, a large delegation of men who registered on June 5th but have not been called Interspersed through the parade were school children from all over the county, and a number of decorated cars whose owners we did not learn. It was a wonderful parade and a demonstration of which every true American in Hancock county may well feel proud.

The dinner hour having arrived the boys who will leave to join the army were given a banquet by the ladies of the Red Cross in the basement of the Congregational church and the rest of the crowd had a picnic dinner on the court yard and neighboring lawns. Following the banquet A. C. Ripley, president of the day, made a few remarks to the young men and introduced Father Baxter of Britt who gave a very good address and one much appreciated He is a fine speaker.

At 2 o'clock the crowd assembled on the court house lawn. After an invocation, a band concert was listened to for half an hour. Prof. Jeffers assembled the four bands together and gave a fine concert. Ole Peterson of Britt rendered a vocal solo. The main address of the day was then given by J. R. Files of Fort Dodge He is one of the best public speakers in Iowa and held an audience of thousands for about an hour although they had to stand through the entire program. His address was one to inspire patriotism in anyone. Following this there was more music by the band and a selection by a male quartette. The program was closed by the band playing the "Star Spangled Banner."

Notes on the Day.

The Mason City Boy Scouts Drum Corps were very liberal with their music. They entertained the crowd for two hours before the set program began.

The Red Cross ladies wish to thank the people who were so willing to aid in furnishing provisons for the banquet. Enough was left over to serve a benefit supper to a large crowd.

An effort was made to count the cars in the streets in the afternoon. Over 1500 were counted.

The estimates on the crowd present range from 10,000 to 15,000.

There are still some who do not take off their hats when the band plays "The Star Spangled Banner."

A banner "Loyalty First" was suspended over the street between the Farmers' National Bank and the Variety Store.

Perfect order was kept and no accidents or trouble of any kind were reported.

Main street was roped off from the Grobaty-Schneider corners to the street south of the Court House.

A. C. Ripley, a resident of Long Beach, Calif., was proud to be in Garner and act as president of the day.

Anyone who is not a true American should have heard J R. Files and Father Baxter

Prof. Jeffers is to be complimented on the fine service his bands gave.

Otis Dana of Britt was at home on a furlough from Camp Dodge and led the registered men in the parade.

Though the late Emperor Francis Joseph was the oldest reigning sovereign in Europe, he was not the oldest royalty. The Empress Eugenie is four years older, while the Dowager Grand Duches of Mecklenburg-Strelitz, the grandmother of the grand duke, was eight years older. Thus the last surviving grandchild of George III was the oldest royalty in Europe. The elder sister of the late Duke of Cambridge, and consequently the aunt of Queen Mary, of England, it was on June 28, 1843, that her marriage took place at Buckingham palace. She received an annuity of £3,000 a year from the British exchequer, which being paid since for the period of 73 years would amount to the tidy sum of £219,000. But when the war broke out it was announced that the annuity, as the lady was living in Germany, would be stopped.

There are in the Scriptures many memorable trees. From the earliest times groves are mentioned in connection with religious worship. Among these trees are mentioned the palm and cedar (Psalms, xcii, 12, 13), the olive (Psalms, lii, 8), the oak (Joshua, xxiv. 26, Judges, xi, 6), the tamarck in Gibeath (I Samuel, xxii, 26), the terebinth in Shecken (Joshua, xxiv, 26), the palm tree of Deborah (Judges iv, 5), the terebinth of enchantments (Judges, ix, 37), the terebinth of wanderers (Judges, iv, 11) and others in I Samuel, xiv, 2 and x, 3.

Postal saving departments are to be introduced into the more important postoffices for the purpose of encouraging the Chinese public to save. This order is the result of plans which have for some time been under consideration by Dr. Chen Chin-tao, China's minister of finance. It is proposed to increase the number of savings departments as the movement "catches on," so that the benefits of the system may be extended to Chinese in all parts of the country.

The drone bees do not work. They are the royal consorts. If more than one queen bee is found in the hive they fight among themselves until only one survives. The survivor becomes the queen of the colony. The only exception to this is when a colony becomes too large for the one queen to rule, when another queen is grown, and a new home is prepared. On the new queen's appearance the old queen leaves the hive, followed by a part of her workers.

KINDIG WINS FIRST CASE IN NEW OFFICE

Jury Returns a Verdict of Second Degree Murder Against Quam Sue, at Nevada.

Ames, Ia., Sept. 15.—After an all night session, the jury which was trying Quam Sue, Chinese, for the murder of Sing Lee last February at Story City, returned a verdict of guilty of second degree murder. James Kindig, recently appointed assistant attorney general was the state's prosecutor.

Evidence taking came to a close Tuesday on the adjournment of the afternoon session, and the presenting of arguments for the state were opened Wednesday morning by County Attorney Harry Langland. He was followed by Attorneys Fred Hanson and Bert Welty who made their pleas for the defense. Mr. Kindig closed the state's case.

The case evolved from the finding of the lifeless body of Sing Lee, dead, from a bullet wound in his head, in the rear of his laundry establishment in Story City on the morning of February 22, 1917. The oriental had resided in Story City for 17 years, and it was known that he saved his earnings, depositing them in a San Francisco bank. Quam Sue, said to be Lee's cousin, for a time lived with his kinsman, but supposedly departed a short time before the death of Lee.

The case has attracted wide attention throughout this section, and the court sessions have been attended by throngs of curious spectators.

COOL, WET WEATHER DAMAGES CORN CROP

Temperatures for State Run 5 Degrees Below Normal—Lowland Corn Killed.

Des Moines, Ia., Sept. 14.—Another cool, wet week has further delayed the maturity of the belated corn crop. The average temperature was about 5 degrees below the normal, and in many localities showers were frequent and the rainfall excessive.

Frost occurred on the mornings of the 10th and 11th over the northern and eastern parts of the state. Over the southern and eastern districts the showers were accompanied by severe wind squalls, which blew down and tangled corn badly, and by hail, which also did considerable damage. Corn made fairly good progress toward maturity in the western counties, where there was little or no rain and considerable sunshine, but over the greater part of the state there has been but little advancement.

Some of the earliest planted corn is beginning to dent, but the bulk of the crop is only in the roasting ear stage and much of it is still in the milk or dough stage. An early killing frost would seriously damage seed corn. The rains, however, were beneficial to pastures, meadows, truck crops and late potatoes and softened the ground for fall plowing, which is now being rushed. Some winter wheat has been sown and if the conditions are favorable there will be a large increase in the acreage of this crop.

Preliminary estimates made September 1 show the average yield of winter wheat per acre is 19 bushels, spring wheat, 21, oats, 50, barley, 37, rye, 20, timothy seed 5 bushels per acre. If these estimates are maintained by final reports the state will produce about 2,500,000 bushels of winter wheat, 3,600,000 of spring wheat, 260,000,000 of oats, 9,500,000 of barley and 700,000 bushels of rye. The area of timothy cut for seed was only 60 per cent of last year's acreage. Eighty per cent of the threshing was finished on September 1.

Telegrams just received from correspondents indicate that the frost has seriously damaged corn and garden truck on low ground in the northeast portion of the state and slight damage has occurred in the northwest and southeast portions.

NEGRO GOES ON RAMPAGE; POLICE CHIEF GETS HIM

Fort Dodge, Ia., Sept. 14.—Ed Scott, a negro, is in the city jail awaiting a hearing on the charge of robbery brought against him by Matthew Quinn, living a few miles north of the city.

Quinn met the negro near the Bennett viaduct shortly after 8 o'clock last night and walked a few blocks with him. Suddenly the negro drew a large pocket knife and holding it against Quinn demanded his money. Quinn gave up about $6 in silver and the negro retreated. However, the victim kept his head and was able to furnish the police with a minute description of his assailant a few moments later.

Chief Jordan found the negro near a livery barn on lower Central avenue, where he had been seen earlier in the day. Scott had changed his clothes to avoid detection. When Chief Jordan arrived he was informing guests on the porch of the Logan hotel that he was going to "cut somebody's heart out" and was still brandishing his knife. When he put up a resistance he was cowed by Jordan shooting his revolver off beneath the negro's chin. He was identified at the city jail by Quinn this morning and was given a preliminary hearing late this afternoon.

The fund will be controlled by the supervisors, state highway commission and three trustees representing the business men. SOLDIERS' INSURANCE BILL PASSES HOUSE

Washington, D. C., Sept. 15.—The administration's soldiers' and sailors' insurance bill, amended so as to equalize the allowance of the dependents of enlisted men and officers, passed the House last night. The vote was 319 to 0.

President Wilson scored a personal victory in the adoption, 141 to 77, of an amendment raising from $5,000 to $10,000 the maximum amount of optional insurance policies that the government would issue to all men in the service. The original draft of the bill carried $10,000, but it was stricken out in committee.

The mildness of the attack of opponents of the measure on the optional insurance section caused surprise. This fight, however, will be carried to the Senate by the insurance companies, it is understood

RAP SOCIALIST PART IN CRISIS

Newspapers of France Declare Party Is Like Workmen's and Soldiers' Delegates in Russia—Barthou Fight Fails.

Paris, Sept. 15.—The new French cabinet contains a new minister, at first called the ministry of propaganda, but later changed to minister of missions abroad Owing to the absence of Franklin Bouillon, the new post is not listed with the other ministry designations in the official journal. The new ministry consists of 15 titular ministers, four ministers of state and 11 under secretaries.

16 In Earlier Cabinets.

The new ministers are divided among five senators, 11 deputies, and two—Louis Locheur and Albert Claveille—do not belong to parliament. The 11 under secretaries are also members of the chamber of deputies. Sixteen of the new cabinet members have been ministers or under secretaries in previous cabinets and three are former premiers. The political groups represented in the new ministry do not include the unified socialists. Premier Painleve represents the socialists-republican group, while the socialist radicals have three members, the radical left three, the republican union of the senate two, the republicans of the left one, and the radical republic union seven members. Seven members of the Ribot ministry retain places in the new cabinet The most noted perhaps of the Ribot ministers to go are Rene Viviani and Albert Thomas.

The Ribot ministry failed late Sunday night when Thomas withdrew and Prof Paul Painleve followed him, being unwilling to remain in a cabinet where the unified socialists were not represented Professor Painleve's first combination met the same fate late Tuesday night when the unified socialists also refused to cooperate with him principally because Alexandre Ribot remained as a minister As President Poincare insisted on Professor Painleve continuing his efforts to form a ministry, he resolved on Wednesday not to give the socialists representation.

Socialistic Coup Fails.

At the last moment a new obstacle arose when some 30 members belonging to the socialistic radical group which numbers 170, being the largest in the chamber of deputies, after a meeting sent a delegation to Professor Painleve to inform him they oppose the creation of ministers of state, and to claim the ministry of the interior or justice for the group's president, Louis Renault, instead of the ministry of state which had been offered to him. Eliminating ministeries of state would have meant the dropping of Louis Barthou, to whom there has been much opposition since he introduced three years ago the military service bill. The group's protest was transmitted to Renault, Daniel Vincent Rene Besnard, Andre Renard and Maurice Long, while they were present at a preliminary meeting of the new cabinet.

On Thursday the cabinet suspended its sittings to allow Renault and other socialist radicals to go to the chamber of deputies to meet their partisans. Renault alone submitted the group's resolution, the other members of the party named for cabinet positions, declared that having pledged their word to Professor Painleve they were unable to withdraw They returned to the preliminary cabinet meeting, thus allowing Professor Painleve to complete his combination Jean Dupuy abandoning the portfolio of agriculture to take the place left vacant by Renault.

The seven are expected to show that the new ministry will start life without the assurance of active support from the unified socialists. The role played by the unified socialists throughout the crisis is generally condemned by the press as comparable to that of the workmen's and soldiers' delegates in Russia.

U. S. Has 1,074,146 Men Under Arms Not Counting Those Called by Draft

Washington, Sept. 15.—In the belief that the country does not understand the real strength of the American military and naval forces, Chairman Dent, of the House military committee, today submitted to the House for publication in the congressional record a statement prepared at his request by the committee on public information from government records.

"On September 6, 1917," says the statement, "there were in the regular army national guard and reserve corps of the army 78,828 officers and 741,053 enlisted men. In the navy there were 141,867 enlisted men, 41,473 naval reserves and 14,500 of the naval militia in the federal service. There were 5,000 men in the coast guard and 6,500 in the hospital corps, making a total of 209,340

Enlisted strength of the marine corps was 29,971, reserves in the service, 1,070, naval volunteers, 704, retired men on active duty, 140. There were approximately 12,000 officers in the navy and 1,166 in the marine corps.

"In other words, on that date, the army had, including officers and enlisted men, 819,881, and the navy 254,265, making a total armed strength on that date of 1,074,146 men, all of whom are volunteers. Prior to that time, there was not a drafted soldier in a single training camp. The draft law was approved May 18, 1917."

BRING DEATH AX TO COURT ROOM

State to Produce Kelly's Letter Saying Murderer Thought He Was "Climbing Jacob's Ladder."

Red Oak, Ia., Sept. 15.—The prosecution expects to play two of the trump cards of its evidence in the trial of the Rev Lyn George J. Kelly for the Villisca ax murders today. Testimony to show that the minister told a passenger on a train between Hastings and Macedonia the full details of the murder more than an hour before the bodies were found in the charnel house at Villisca, will be presented by state witnesses.

They will testify, according to attorneys for the prosecution, that it was about 7 15 o'clock on the morning following the murder that Kelly described the slaying. The bodies were not found until between 8 30 and 9 o'clock. The other important stroke will be the introduction of a letter written by Kelly in July, 1912, a month following the murder, in which he claimed to have secured evidence that would aid in running down the murderer.

The letter was written in the third person and states, according to attorneys, that the murderer thought he was "climbing Jacob's ladder" when he swung the death ax. It further states that the murderer was disturbed in his work by a young couple passing in front of the Joe Moore home and that he had to go out on the porch until they had passed. The prosecution considers the statement concerning "Jacob's ladder" important since Rev. Mr. Kelly said in his confession that he thought he was climbing "Jacob's ladder" when he mounted upstairs in Joe Moore's home The death ax was brought in the court room by Attorney General Havner late Thursday, the Rev. Mr. Kelly moved slightly when it was exhibited but showed no indication that the sight of it disturbed him.

On the witness stand today before a crowd that packed the court room the statements made by Kelly a few days after the murder were told.

"The murderer first stunned his victims and then went back and killed them, one of the Stillinger girls partly aroused and he had more trouble killing her than the others. He had no thought of taking any money. There was a watch there he wanted, but when he was going to take it he heard somebody in front of the house and left.

Joe Moore's watch was found in the charnel house at Villisca in another room from that in which he and his wife were slain.

How Rev. Mr. Kelly, agitated and nervous, told of the ax crime on a train between Hastings and Macedonia more than an hour before the hacked bodies of the Joe Moore family and the Stillinger girls were discovered, was described by Mr. and Mrs. H. Simons, two witnesses, who followed Mrs. Miller to the stand. "We were riding from Sidney to Carson," said Mr. Simons. "Mr. Kelly sat just across the aisle and one seat behind. He was very excited and he talked loudly about the murder of eight people in Villisc. That was shortly after 7 o'clock in the morning."

Ross Moore, brother of Joe Moore, testified Thursday it was about 8:30 o'clock in the morning when he unlocked a door in the Moore home with a skeleton key and found the bodies.

The prosecution followed this evidence with Max Temple, a Macedonia druggist, who declared on the morning following the murder, Kelly told him of hearing a number of blows as he passed the Joe Moore home shortly after midnight, blows that sounded like some one knocking a beast in the head with an ax.

REBEL'S FATE SPLITS CABINET

Russ Rebellion Squelched, Korniloff Announcing He Will Surrender When Alexieff Arrives.

By the Associated Press.

Convinced that General Korniloff's rebellion is definitely at an end, although the general himself has not formally surrendered, the leaders at Petrograd are getting about the reconstruction of the government. Formation of a new cabinet is said to be well along toward completion.

The submission of so many of the troops and leaders who were adhering to General Korniloff, apparently has left the leader of the revolt in a position of helplessness. He is said to have notified the government of his intention to surrender upon the arrival at his headquarters of General Alexieff, who has become chief of staff under Premier Kerensky, now commander in chief of the Russian armies. One of Korniloff's principal supporters, General Kaladines, chief of the Cossacks, is reported to have been arrested.

Petrograd, Sept. 15.—What punishment will be meted out to General Korniloff split the cabinet today.

Korniloff's personal surrender is imminent. His troops have dwindled to a mere handful. There is a widespread public demand that those responsible for the revolt be severely dealt with. It is this that caused the resignations of Vice Premier Nekrasoff, Minister of Foreign Affairs Tereschenko, minister of food, minister of agriculture, and the minister of ways and communications.

The latter explained that the step was taken because the minister felt it was impossible to obey Kerensky's order to "take certain measures against Korniloff."

Later the minister of foreign affairs withdrew his resignation and it was announced this afternoon that he had been made vice premier.

WHOLESALE CHANGES MADE.

London, Sept. 15.—The Petrograd correspondent of Reuter's, limited, states that Vice Premier Nekrasoff has informed the press that he and M. Tereschenko, minister of foreign affairs, have decided to leave their posts in the cabinet, considering that their participation in the government narrowed their political horizon and being only business ministers without party support they did not possess sufficient strength in the cabinet. The vice premier also announced the withdrawal from the cabinet of M. Pieschehonoff, minister of food and supplies.

Other changes in the cabinet include the retirement of M. Tchernoff, minister of agriculture, who will be replaced by M. Avskentieff, present minister of the interior, who in turn will be succeeded by M. Kischkin, a constitutional democrat. M. Kischkin enters the cabinet unconditionally. M. Koarepiefe, minister of communications, resigned because he did not consider it possible to execute Premier Kerensky's orders to take certain measures against General Korniloff.

REBELS QUIT; ARREST GENERAL.

Petrograd, Thursday, Sept. 15.—Further evidence of defection in the ranks of the Cossacks from General Korniloff is given by the arrest near Luga, of General Krymoff.

General Krymoff submitted without resistance and was brought to Petrograd. The Cossacks of his command have joined the government forces in the Luga garrison. Railway service between Luga and Petrograd has been resumed.

NAVY DEVELOPMENT REVIEWED BY DANIELS

Annapolis, Md., Sept. 15.—The remarkable development of the navy in the last year was described by Secretary Daniels in an address at the naval academy today to the graduating ensigns of the naval reserve. He credited President Wilson with giving the initial impetus to the movement that has resulted in a great expansion of the service.

The graduates, 174 in number, are members of the corps of reserve naval officers, who have just completed a three months' intensive course of instruction to fit them for duty aboard ship or on shore.

F. H. McAdoo, and D. F. Houston, jr., sons of the secretaries of the treasury and agriculture respectively, and J. S. Morgan, son of J. Pierpont Morgan, the financier, were among the graduates.

SWEDEN BEGINS HUNT FOR LEAK EXPOSING GUILT

Second Letters, Showing Diplomat in Mexico Kaiser's Spy and Messenger Boy, Brings Action.

SHIPS SEIZED BY URUGUAY

Second South American Country Count Luxburg Is Accredited to Puts Marines on All Teuton Vessels.

Amsterdam, Sept. 15.—The German government has refused to permit the publication of the text of Count Von Luxburg's notes to Germany through the Swedish foreign office, according to press comments this afternoon.

London, Sept 15.—An official statement issued by the Swedish government, telegraphs the correspondent at Stockholm of the Centeral News agency, says that O. A. H. Ewerlodf, secretary of the Swedish ministry of foreign affairs has been given leave of absence from the foreign office and has placed himself at the disposal of the minister of justice, with the object of assisting in the special investigation in connection with the Swedish-Argentinian revelations.

Montevideo, Uruguay, Sept. 15.—Uruguayan marines today boarded all the German ships in the harbor here the government having heard of plans to sink the vessels.

Washington, Sept. 15.—How German's secret practice of using Sweden's diplomatic service for transmitting forbidden communications between German agents and the Berlin foreign office, prevailed in Mexico as well as in Argentine, is revealed in a document published by the state department which passed between the celebrated Herr Von Eckhardt, German minister in Mexico and the chancellor.

Germany's Messenger Boy.

It discloses how Folke Cronholm, charge of the Swedish embassy to Mexico, practically acted as a messenger boy for Von Eckhardt, personally transmitting as his legation's own dispatches messages for the German legation, even going to the point of delivering them personally at the telegraph office and how Von Eckhardt recommended that a decoration be secretly bestowed upon Cronholm for his services.

As an added chapter to the story of the recently revealed intrigue in Argentine, the disclosure gives a hint of the nature of the evidence in this government's possession of Germany's illegitimate of neutral diplomats. The full extent of this evidence may never be published, but it is known to be complete and this government's action in making some of it public is not felt to be directed so much at Sweden as toward further informing the world at large of Germany's practices. It does, however, raise some speculation as to how the Stockholm foreign office will explain it.

Bought With Decorations.

Stockholm has declared that Baron Loeween, Swedish minister to Argentine transmitted message for Count Von Luxburg, the German charge there, without knowing their contents. Whether the same defense will be made for Cronholm is not known, he no longer is in the Swedish diplomatic service. The interesting points in the minds of officials and diplomats here is how much the Stockholm foreign office knew of the affair.

Von Eckhardt's letter to the German chancellor recounting the extent to which Cronholm used Sweden's diplomatic privileges for Germany and his recommendation of an imperial decoration for him is regarded by allied diplomats here as further evidence of their charge that Germany has distributed decorations among the diplomats of friendly neutrals for such services probably in other instances.

Copies of the Von Eckhardt letter have been forwarded by the state department to Ambassador Fletcher in Mexico and to Minister Morris at Stockholm, but neither has instructions to present the information to the government to which he is accredited.

Not Published in Germany.

Dispatches to the department from The Hague dated yesterday were that up to that time the disclosures made by Secretary Lansing, of the manner in which Count Luxburg had used the Swedish minister in Argentine as a bearer of dispatches, had not been published in Germany.

It is not expected that this government will take any further action except possibly to add to the story of intrigue by revealing more documents in its possession.

The department's translation of the Von Eckhardt letter follows:

Reviews Aid to Germans.

"Imperial Legation, Mexico, to his Excellency, the Imperial Chancellor:

"Herr Folke Cronholm, the Swedish charge d'affaires here since his arrival here has not disguised his sympathy for Germany, and has entered into close relations with this legation. He is the only diplomat through whom information from a hostile camp can be obtained. Moreover, he acts as intermediary for official diplomatic intercourse between this legation and your excellency. In the course of this, he is obliged to go personally each time to the telegraph office, not seldom quite late at night in order to hand in the telegrams.

"Herr Cronholm was formerly at Peking and at Tokio, and was responsible for the preliminary arrangements which had to be made for the representation of his country in each case. Before he came out here he had been in charge of the consulate general at Hamburg. Buying Now Is A Double Investment!

The automobile is recognized as one of the needs of the present day, and the buying of it is regularly an investment. Just now, with the costs of raw material becoming higher and higher there can be no question but that in the future automobiles must sell at higher prices. THE RECRUIT

The parade that passed before us
Gave us food for many a thought
Of the Boys who go so cheerful
On a mission danger fraught.

And the one thing we are proud of
And for which we owe them thanks
Was the number of vocation
Represented in the ranks.

There we saw the husky farmer boy
With a smile upon his lips.
Do you think he hesitated to go?
Well not one bit.

The clerk turned in his key,
Said, "Good Bye," "I am it."
The plumber dropped his wrenches
To go and do his bit.

The auto-man, the blacksmith,
The printer, painter, and carpenter too,
All were there under the Red, White and Blue.

They have gone to join the colors,
Not a kick throughout the bunch.
They will represent Old Iowa alright
We have a gentle hunch.

And think of the nationality
Represented in the line.
There we saw the English,
The Irishman and the Dane,
The Dago and the Chink,
Most every nation represented you would think.

All were marching together,
I tell you it was fine.
Even the loyal Dutchmen were there
From their home, The Castle on the Rhine.

They represented every country
But all American citizens now.
They will fight for Uncle Sam
Until Liberty is the only law.

They are the greatest fighting combination
The world has ever seen.
But give credit to the parents
Who bid their sons God Speed.
"Go fight and do your best my boys,
It is your Country's Need."

CHAPTER THIRTEEN (Continued.)

Almost at once came the CQ, CQ, CQ, ZZ, ZZ, ZZ, which told that Poldhu was calling for all stations and on every ship within 1,000 miles of that point of rock, the wireless man tuned up his instrument, and waited. The commercial messages came first, and there were a lot of them; four for the Ottilie, three for the Adriatic, five to be relayed far ahead to the Mauretania, one for the incoming Majestic, and one for the Rotterdam. Then the Poldhu man announced that he was ready to receive, and as many more were sent out into the night to him, for relay on to London, and from there to far separated points on the continent. At last there was a moment's silence, and then the SP, SP, SP which told that the news service was about to start. And every man within hearing picked up a fresh pencil and made ready to write, as from dictation.

'SP SP SP,' snapped Poldhu Time 12 45 G Three hundred wds

And so on to the end of the message. And when the end was reached, the operator waited 15 minutes and then went all over again and sent the message a second time so that every one would be sure to get it all. Then he shut off and went to bed

Thursday dawned clear and warm and the Ottilie's passengers, appearing on deck by twos and threes, rejoiced that the day was to be a fine one They found the words of the day before awaiting them on the bulletin board at the head of the main companion way, and had great fun deciphering it, very few of them stopping to think how wonderful it was that it should be there at all And then some of them celebrated their first morning at sea by a three mile tramp before breakfast others, less strenuous, lounged at the rail, waiting impatiently for the breakfast gong, a few, finding themselves disturbed by the slow and even motion of the ship, bundled themselves up in their steamer chairs and hoped that nature would soon readjust itself Then the gong sounded, and the deck was deserted, except by the bundled up occupants of the chairs, to whom the solicitous deck steward brought, more or less vainly, various light articles of food.

An hour later, the decks were full again. From the upper deck came the clack of shuffle board; on the promenade deck the chairs were full of novel readers, and little groups here and there were making each other's acquaintance. The life of shipboard had begun.

On the boat deck, various passengers, singly or in twos and threes, paused to listen to the crackle of electricity which came from the little wireless house. The door was closed, but by standing on tip toe they could see over the screen at the window, and catch a glimpes of a blond young man, with a receiver clamped over both ears, bending above his key, from which came a series of vicious looking sparks. The sound was vaguely disquieting, suggesting lightning to the more timid, or some strange and dangerous force of nature not to be trifled with so most of them preferred to descend again to the upper promenade, or to sit down some distance away. Presently two men climbed the ladder from the deck below, and looked about them.

"Let us sit here," said the younger of them, in German, and motioned toward a bench which had been built against the cabin.

"Very well, your * * *" He stopped himself abruptly. "It is difficult to break oneself of a long habit," he said, with a little laugh; and, waiting for the other to seat himself, sat down beside him.

They lighted cigarets and sat for a moment without speaking.

There was a considerable difference in the ages of the two. One was past middle age, heavily built, and with a face bronzed as only years of exposure to wind and rain could bronze it. His upper lip was a shade or two lighter than the rest of his face, and spoke of a moustache recently removed. The other man had also an outdoor look, but he had not been hardened by long service as his companion had. He was softer, more effeminate. He seemed to be not over 21 or 22, was taller, a little too much inclined to plumpness, but with an open and ingenuous countenance, lighted by a pair of honest blue eyes.

"It is good," said the older man at last, speaking in German and in a tone carefully guarded, "to sit here and listen to the crackle of the wireless—it seems to fit in, somehow, with this beautiful morning. I have grown to love it, and I have never conquered my wonder—it is so marvelous that one can throw into the atmosphere a message to be picked up and understood hundreds of miles away. It seems even more wonderful on the ocean than on the land A message that travels as fast as light travels Think of it, my prince"

"It is, indeed, wonderful," the younger man agreed "But it seems to me, my dear admiral, that if what you tell me is true, there is in the world at this moment something more wonderful still—a force which even you do not understand

"You are right," agreed the other, gravely But we must understand it we must control it it means world empire"

Both their faces were set and stern and they spoke almost in whispers with a glance from time to time to make sure no one was near or all ips into silence when any one approached

"If we succeed," the younger man began but the other grasped him by the arm

"There must be no 'if,'" he protested Do not permit yourself to use that word. There must be no failure Think, for a moment, of the tremendous issues which hang upon it And after all the game is in our hands"

"I have not yet met the inventor," said the younger man; "but from what you have told me, I fear he is an enthusiast who will make difficulties. However, as you say, we must succeed at any price."

"Yes, at any price" and as he uttered the words, the admiral glanced at his companion s face. But the other was gazing out across the water, and did not seem to notice the other's peculiar emphasis

Again they sat silent as three or four persons, passing, paused to peer in at the window of the wireless house.

"Are you sure the French do not suspect?" asked the younger man, when they had gone.

"How could they?"

"The inventor must have left some trace—that wireless station in the grove."

"A small affair, well hidden. Even if it is discovered, it cannot possibly be connected with the disaster."

"Perhaps not. But the other installation?"

"The other installation was brought away by the inventor. He left nothing behind except some batteries, which can betray no secret"

"And he has the mechanism with him now?"

"Yes—in his baggage. You see how complete our power is."

"I see," nodded the other briefly. "You have arranged a conference with him?"

"I will do so. There is plenty of time."

"Why do we go to America?"

"It is a whim of his—that this great treaty should be signed there. We had to humor him, or he might have grown suspicious. I think he is a little mad."

Again there was a moment's silence. Then the older man threw away his cigaret and rose.

"The wireless man is an old protege of mine," he said. "I spent a very pleasant hour with him last night. If you do not object, I will go in again to see him."

The other nodded, and Pachmann opened the door of the wireless house and disappeared inside. His companion lighted another cigaret and smoked it gloomily, as his thought reverted to his own affairs. It was flattering of course, that she should have been selected to accompany Pachmann on his mission; but, nevertheless, he regretted Berlin—or, rather, he regretted a certain blue eyed, flaxen haired girl, with a figure like Juno's * * * Confound it! It was only to separate him from her that he had been sent with Pachmann! Why couldn't his father leave him alone! He was old enough to manage his own affairs! And besides * * *

The door of the wireless house opened and Pachmann appeared Very quietly he closed the door, very quietly he sat down beside his companion. And then he mopped a shining forehead with a hand that trembled, and the younger man saw with astonishment that his face was livid.

"What is it? What has happened?" he asked.

Pachmann tried twice before he found his voice. When he did speak, it was in a hoarse whisper

"I was wrong," he said. "France does suspect!"

CHAPTER XIV.

THE MESSAGE.

A little group of laughing young women came scurrying up the ladder from the promenade, and the admiral and his companion sat stonily silent until they had passed. Then the admiral spoke again, still in a whisper, but his voice was under control.

"The most astonding thing has happened," he said. "I cannot understand it. The operator in there has just received a message from Cherbourg, asking if there is not on board, in stateroom 514, a man named Ignace Vard, accompanied by his daughter. It is signed by Lepine, chief of the French secret service."

The younger man drew a quick sibilant breath, and his face, too, turned pale beneath the tan.

"But how could he know?" he gasped. "How could he suspect?"

"Lepine is the very devil!" growled the other. "Perhaps it was that wireless installation, as you suggested."

"But that could not betray the man's name—the boat—even his stateroom!"

"No; I cannot understand it," said Pachmann, and mopped his face again. Then he thrust his handkerchief back into his pocket and sprang to his feet. "However it occurred, we must stop it," he said. "Come."

"Stop it—but how?"

"There is only one way. Come!"

The admiral hurried down the ladder, his companion at his heels. From the upper promenade he descended to the deck below, and then, without hesitating, climbed another ladder and stepped over a low gate which gave entrance to the first class promenade. The gate, it is true, bore a sign stating that second class passengers must not pass it; but Pachmann did not even glance at it. He seemed to know the ship, for he pressed on, disregarding the curious glances cast at himself and his companion, mounted again to the boat deck, and did not pause until he had reached its extreme forward end, just under the bridge. There he stopped at a door just abaft the ladder leading to the bridge and knocked sharply.

"Enter!" cried a voice, and the younger man, following the admiral, found himself in a large and handsome stateroom, whose windows looked straight forward over the bow. At the desk a bearded man of middle age was glancing through some papers. He looked up at the intruders with evident astonishment. "Really, gentlemen," he began, and then he stopped, his gaze shifting from one face to the other and back again in frank bewilderment.

"Captain Hausmann," said the admiral, stepping forward, "probably you do not remember me, since we have met but once. But I think you know the prince."

Captain Hausmann's eyes widened, and he sprang quickly to his feet, his hand at the visor of his cap.

"Your highness," he began, but the prince stopped him.

"I am not a highness at present, captain," he said, laughing, "only a humble passenger of the second class. I am very glad to see you again," and holding out his hand, he gave that of the astonished mariner a hearty clasp.

"A passenger of the second class!" stammered the captain "But I do not understand!"

"It is not necessary that you should," said the admiral, curtly, and at the words, the captain reddened a little.

"Ah, now I know you," he said, quietly. "Admiral Pachmann," and again he saluted.

"Yes," said the admiral, acknowledging the salute. "We had not intended to betry, even to you, our presence on board, but an unforeseen circumstance has made it necessary. No one else, of course, must suspect it. All that you need to know—indeed, all that we are permitted to tell you—is that his highness and myself are at this moment engaged upon an affair of state of the first importance. Here are my credentials."

He took from an inner pocket a long leather pocketbook, extracted from it a heavy envelope sealed with a great black seal, and passed it to the captain.

The latter took it, glanced at the seal and hesitated, for it bore the imperial crown.

Do you intend that I should open this" he asked

I wish you to do so," answered Pachmann.

With fingers that trembled a little the captain loosened the seal lifted the flap, and drew out the sheet of paper which lay within It was an ivory finished white, almost as stiff as a card, the entire upper left quarter occupied by the imperial crown and monogram, the other three-quarters covered by writing in a large and rather stiff hand, with a scrawling signature at the bottom. The captain glanced at this signature, then, his face very grave, read the missive slowly and carefully. Finally he returned the sheet to its envelope, and handed it back to Pachmann, his eyes meeting the admiral's with a kind of awed wonder.

I am at your service," he said.

Will you * * *

There was a tap at the door The captain went to it and opened it, standing so that his body filled the doorway He exchanged a word with some one, and then closed the door and turned back into the room a sheaf of papers in his hand

Will you not sit down?" he asked

We will be but a moment," said Pachmann. "That was the wireless man, was it not?"

Yes"

Among the messages you have in your hand is one from Lepine, prefect of the Paris Service du Surete He asks whether you have aboard in stateroom 514 a man named Ignace Vard, accompanied by his daughter."

Captain Hausmann, with an admirable composure, glanced through the messages.

"Yes, here it is," he said.

"I will dictate the answer," said the admiral

Without a word, the captain sat down again at his desk and wrote to Pachmann s dictation

Lepine, Paris

No record of Ignace Vard and daughter on Ottilie Stateroom 514 unoccupied

Hausemann, Captain.

"It would be well to have the message sent at once," added Pachman "You will also see that the name Vard and his daughter do not appear on your passenger list, and that they are moved from the stateroom they now occupy to some other one. The records for the voyage must show that that room was indeed unoccupied. You will also instruct the purser that the tickets surrendered by Vard and his daughter are not to be turned in, but, in case of inquiry, to be reported unused."

The captain had listened carefully.

"On what pretext will I move these people?" he asked.

"The pretext must be found."

The captain stroked his beard with a troubled air.

"I fear there is no second cabin room empty—we are very crowded. Would it matter if I brought them forward?"

Pachmann pondered a moment.

"No," he said at last. "On the whole, that might be better. You will enter them on your passenger list by some other name—or, better still, omit them altogether."

"But the immigration authorities!" protested the captain. "You have forgotten them!"

"We will think of them at the proper time," said Pachmann, impatiently. "This is not the moment to make objections. I think you understand?"

Hausmann bowed.

It Paid.

"Has your husband quit work?"

"Yes. He has figured it out that he can save more by staying home and running the furnace economically than he can earn by going down town."

Too Sick To Work

Many Women in this Condition Regain Health by Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Convincing Proof of This Fact.

Ridgway, Penn. — "I suffered from female trouble with backache and pain in my side for over seven months so I could not do any of my work. I was treated by three different doctors and was getting discouraged when my sister-in-law told me how Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound had helped her. I decided to try it, and it restored my health, so I now do all of my housework which is not light as I have a little boy three years old." —Mrs. O. M. RHINES, Ridgway, Penn.

Mrs. Lindsey Now Keeps House For Seven.

Tennille, Ga.—"I want to tell you how much I have been benefited by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. About eight years ago I got in such a low state of health I was unable to keep house for three in the family. I had dull, tired, dizzy feelings, cold feet and hands nearly all the time and could scarcely sleep at all. The doctor said I had a severe case of ulceration and without an operation I would always be an invalid, but I told him I wanted to wait awhile. Our druggist advised my husband to get Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and it has entirely cured me. Now I keep house for seven and work in the garden some, too. I am so thankful I got this medicine. I feel as though it saved my life and have recommended it to others and they have been benefited".—Mrs. W. E. LINDSEY, R. R. 3, Tennille, Ga.

Feed the Fighters! Win the War

Harvest the Crops — Save the Yields

On the battle fields of France and Flanders, the United States boys and Canadian boys are fighting side by side to win for the World the freedom that Prussianism would destroy. While doing this they must be fed and every ounce of muscle that can be requisitioned must go into use to save this year's crop. A great harvest period requires the combined forces of the two countries in team work, as the soldier boys in France and Flanders are demonstrating.

The Combined Fighters in France and Flanders and the Combined Harvesters in America WILL Bring the Allied Victory Nearer.

A reciprocal arrangement for the use of farm workers has been perfected between the Department of the Interior of Canada and the Departments of Labor and Agriculture of the United States under which it is proposed to permit the harvesters that are now engaged in the wheat fields of Oklahoma, Kansas, Iowa, North Dakota, South Dakota, Nebraska, Minnesota and Wisconsin to go over into Canada, with the privilege of later returning to the United States, when the crops in the United States have been conserved, and help to save the enormous crops in Canada which by that time will be ready for harvesting.

HIS OLD DREAM CAME TRUE

Miner Was Killed in the Manner That Was Foretold in Vision Twenty Years Before.

In a lecture at Blackwood Rev. Al Griffin of Cross Oak, a minister who, after forty years' preaching, is as vigorous as ever, referred to subconsciousness, the mysterious power that controls us even when asleep, says a Cardiff Mail writer. Outside the chapel one of his hearers narrated a curious incident which happened to a Blackwood man. He lived near the present railway station, and dreamed one night that while working on his stall as a miner a stone fell on him and killed him.

The dream was so vivid that he gave up his work at once and emigrated to America. Twenty years later he returned to Blackwood and sought work in his old colliery. He was told that no one had been working in his old stall since he had left, and work was found for him in the adjoining stall. While engaged there his pick accidentally struck through the coal which divided him from his old stall, there came a fall and the twenty-year-old dream was fulfilled.

PHYSICAL WRECK

Helped by Doan's Kidney Pills

Life Held Little Joy Until Doan's Effected Marvelous Recovery.

Without warning I was dragged to the brink of the grave by malignant kidney trouble," says Robert Wendt, 1117 Cypress Ave., Bronx, N. Y. "My kidneys seemed to stop acting and the pains in my back were terrible. Big, bloaty puffs came under my eyes and attacks of dizziness often blinded me. My limbs swelled twice normal size and I could press big dents into the flesh.

"I was confined to bed and had convulsions several times a day. Despite the best of treatment, I grew worse and was taken to the hospital. I did not improve, however, and was brought home again, barely holding out. Toward the last of 1913, a friend advised me to try Doan's Kidney Pills, and I cannot put into words what they did for me. The first box helped me more than all the other medicines and treatments I had taken. I improved and from an emaciated wreck such as I have taken on good, solid flesh until I now weigh 225 pounds and am in the best of health. Doan's alone have the credit."

LIFT YOUR CORNS OFF WITH FINGERS

How to loosen a tender corn or callus so it lifts out without pain.

Let folks step on your feet hereafter; wear shoes a size smaller if you like, for corns will never again send electric sparks of pain through you, according to this Cincinnati authority.

He says that a few drops of a drug called freezone, applied directly upon a tender, aching corn, instantly relieves soreness, and soon the entire corn, root and all, lifts right out.

This drug dries at once and simply shrivels up the corn or callus without even irritating the surrounding skin.

A small bottle of freezone obtained at any drug store will cost very little but will positively remove every hard or soft corn or callus from one's feet.

If your druggist hasn't stocked this new drug yet, tell him to get a small bottle of freezone for you from his wholesale drug house—adv.

A Maniac in the Trench.

An officer writes about an incident which is probably one of the most gruesome that has been recorded of life in trenches:

One night as a working party under Lieutenant Rathbone was proceeding down a communication trench they were fired upon from close quarters. On inquiry Lieutenant Rathbone ascertained that the shots came from a soldier who had run amuck and had posted himself with loaded rifle and fixed bayonet farther down the trench. Lieutenant Rathbone borrowed a rifle and, accompanied by Corporal Feldwick, advanced along the trench until in view of the mentally deranged man. They then advanced with rifles at the ready, the officer calling upon the man to surrender. Receiving no reply, they then dropped their rifles and rushed him, and after disarming him took him to the nearest dressing station. Corporal Feldwick, who is a prisoner of war, has also been awarded the Albert medal of the second class.

NEW GUN SHOOTS BARBED WIRE INSTEAD OF BULLETS

After a murderous artillery fire has swept away the ordinary barbed wire entanglements in front of a trench there is nothing to impede the onrush of troops except machine gun and infantry fire, accompanied at certain times by well placed barrage firs from the rear. Under most conditions this resistance is sufficient to deplete the ranks of an invading force, but the fact that the first, second and third line of trenches may be captured in a single charge is proof that gunfire alone cannot dissipate a body of troops. There have been numerous occasions in this war where troops of both sides have deliberately plunged through a heavy barrage fire to carry a line of trenches.

Accordingly, Enid S. Wales, of Detroit, Mich., has invented a novel projectile which shoots barbed wire instead of bullets. His idea, according to the Popular Science Monthly, is to first impede the progress of an onrushing body of troops by spreading coils of barbed wire in front of them and then to attack them with infantry and machine gun fire. The inventor claims that his projectile will distribute masses of barbed wire over a large area, enmeshing a whole company of troops.

Briefly the projectile consists of a stem which fits the barrel of a trench mortar, a central chamber containing the explosive charge, into which chamber the stem fits; and several hollow caps which carry the coils of barbed wire the inner ends of which are secured to the body of the shell. When the projectile explodes the caps containing the barbed wire shoot out like bullets distributing the wire in tangled masses. A time fuse is provided so that the distance can be gauged.

No Taxing for the Fun of Taxing.

From the New York World

[illegible] the Senate has rejected the proposal of a [illegible] represents no difference of opinion on the propriety of taxing such profits. It represents no opposition to their taxation in any amount necessary at this stage of the war. It was rather a vote on the question of taxing war profits utterly regardless of the present needs of the government and merely for the sake of taxing or confiscating these profits.

Mr. La Follette stated the whole case of the badly defeated proponents of this proposition when he said that "if the war does not last through the year every dollar that we have failed to collect in war taxes for the year is lost to the government forever." This is obviously untrue so long as individual income taxes remain and are fairly collected. What the government does not now take from war profits will first or last be takable in war or peace by income taxes. But if the La Follette dictum were true, why stop at any fraction of war profits? Why not take them all?

There is no consistent answer to this, and 62 Senators of 79 voting so considered the matter. How much money does the government need from this source in this fiscal year along with other taxes decided on like the immensely prolific personal income taxes? That should be the deciding question, and not even the question of leaving to industry some stimulus to production can be allowed a higher deciding voice. And the La Follettes themselves admit that no such sum as 70 or 60 per cent or more per cent of all so-called war profits is now needed or can be honestly and economically spent within our first year of war, together with money otherwise to be raised.

The Senate revenue bill as now revised taxes up to 60 per cent of any excessive war profits. Its rates have been calculated to the estimated needs of the year. They can and will be increased as the need appears. To do more than this is to violate the first principles of public revenue. It is to tax for the fun of taxing or to confiscate for the fun of confiscating.

From the Chicago Tribune.

[illegible] militarists rule Germany, we sus[illegible] peace talk is being employed at [illegible]est as a psychological weapon. [illegible]ave not been content merely to [illegible]ight. This war on the battlefield. Their [illegible]spies were at work, long before the war, sowing disloyalty and dissension in each of the countries marked for attack. When they aim at a neighbor's destruction they first undermine his morale. When fighting has begun they seek to deprave it still further by using the device known as frightfulness. As the war proceeds they employ peace talk at intervals for much the same purpose. There is always a chance that some faint hearted, war weary member of the alliance may be seduced into begging the rest to back down. There is always a certainty that the faint hearted, war weary faction within each of the allied countries will groan, "O why not end it now and stop this needless slaughter?" That disintegrates morale. Of all known tricks for weakening the enemy, it is the safest, the easiest and the cheapest.

Reed, of Missouri.

From the Baltimore Sun

If Senator Reed, of Missouri, had been given a big retaining fee by the kaiser's secret service, or had been employed as the paid attorney of interests that are opposed to food control, which of course he has not, he could not be exerting himself more actively to the advantage of both than he is doing. The violence, the venomousness, the bitterness he displays in opposition to the food bill are inexplicable to sane and patriotic Americans. Is it "pure cussedness" and meanness and littleness, or is it something else? Certainly he is not inspired by patriotism, wisdom or statesmanship.

He Cares for "Sourdoughs."

From the Seattle Post-Intelligencer.

A. G. Shoup, superintendent of the Alaska Pioneers' Home at Sitka, has arrived at Seattle.

"This 'sourdough' home was established by the territory in 1913," said Mr. Shoup, "and we now have 65 inmates, most of them old fellows, who have pioneered it in almost every district of Alaska.

"The territory established this home for the purpose of caring for the old 'sourdoughs' and the Sitka institution is really a haven for these old fellows, who have become incapacitated from further pursuing the golden rainbow. The average of these 65 inmates is 68 years and among them we have several who have been prospecting in Alaska for 40 years.

"In addition to caring for the inmates of this home the territory also has a pension system, which cares for the needs of a number of others who are not altogether helpless, as well as of the widows and needy women."

A Hint of the Future.

London Tit Bits.

Sir Hubert von Herkomer, the well known artist, who died recently, used to tell an amusing story of a London art dealer. The man had two beautiful reproductions of the painting, "The Approaching Storm."

One of these pictures he placed in the show window, but it did not sell. At length, in order to draw attention to the picture, he used the words, "The Approaching Storm," especially suitable for a wedding present."

Prince Potato.

From the New York Herald.

The war has certainly served to lift the humble potato to a special throne of its own in the human dietary. During the 300 years since the potato was introduced to mankind from America the estimation of its food value has been constantly rising, until now with scientific approval it has come to be looked upon as one of our most important foodstuffs. The potato used to be thought mainly valuable for its starchy content, though human experience seemed to show a wider value than this. Certain races in Europe, notably the Irish, succeeded in living, in times of stress particularly, almost exclusively on potatoes and buttermilk. Such a diet would seem to be too low in nitrogen elements for health and strength maintenance, but recent investigations have confirmed human instinct and contradicted scientific conclusions. There are now a series of important studies which show that the potato can be even an excellent source of nitrogen for the human body, supporting it with only the addition of butter. It is said that we are going to have this year in the United States the largest crop of potatoes that we have ever had, and it is evident that they were never so welcome as now. Prince Potato comes into the recognition of his royal rights in the food line, just at the opportune moment.

Pacifists During Civil War.

Samuel J. Kirkwood, governor of Iowa, during the civil war, had no use for pacifists, according to the author of a biography which will soon be published by the State Historical society of Iowa, says the Des Moines Capital. "We are eminently a peaceful and peace loving people," said Governor Kirkwood in a message to the legislature "and the interruption of our peaceful avocations by war and its incidents bears hardly upon us; but we must remember that the only way to bring back and make permanently secure to us that peace we love so well, is to convince those who have thrust this war upon us and to convince all others that, although we love peace much, we love our country's honor and the perpetuity of our union more. There may be amongst us a few men who know no impulse of patriotism have no love of country, and can see nothing, but sordid gain! There may be amongst a few others who, blinded by prejudice engendered by former political strife, cannot forget that the government is guided in this struggle for its life by the hands of their political opponents, and who would rather see it perish than have it saved by their hands, who will cry peace when there is no peace, and who will endeavor to turn us from the prosecution of this war by dwelling upon and exaggerating the misfortunes it has brought and will bring upon us. But these men are few in number and weak in influence."

Begin Now!

"Let the young man begin by taking a brisk walk every day, of 20 or 30 minutes, gradually increasing the length of his hike," urges Maj. Gen. Tasker H. Bliss, acting chief of staff of United States army, in the New York Post. "It will strengthen the muscles of his legs, and make it easy for him to march long distances later on. Of course, the best thing the drafted man could do would be to engage in sports and games which will develop his stamina and harden his muscles. There is plenty of time for everyone to get physical training. It helps not only to make better soldiers and to start the individual on the road to promotion sooner, but it makes the recruit's life happier. One-half of the complaints that come from recruits about food and disagreeable conditions of living are due directly to the irritable state of mind of the soldier. All this could be eliminated if the drafted man would take advantage of the interval between now and the autumn to train himself. Each man knows best perhaps, how to do that for himself; each man can make the transition for himself as gradual as is consistent with his strength, and at the end of a few weeks, at any rate, when the drafted men are called to arms, we should have a splendid body of men in good physical condition. The time to start is right now."

Speaking Out.

David Grayson.

I keep learning that there is nothing which reaches men's hearts like talking straight out the convictions and emotions of your innermost soul. Those who hear you may not agree with you, or they may not understand you fully, but something incalculable, something vital, passes. And as for a boy or girl it is one of the sorriest of mistakes to talk down to them; almost always your lad of 15 thinks more simply, more fundamentally, than you do; and what he accepts as good coin is not facts or precepts, but feelings and convictions—life. And why shouldn't he speak out?

Let Them Vote.

From the Boston Post.

It is a matter of simple justice that our citizen soldiery shall not lose that supreme right of citizenship, the vote, by reason of their absence from the polls on election day. This fact has been recognised and provision has been made heretofore—the latest instance being that of last fall when troops mobilized on the Mexican border voted there.

A good many elections—state and municipal—will be held in the coming season. No congress or president is to be chosen; but the men in the distant camps or at the front in France ought to have their voices heard in the choice of governor, legislature, city and town officers, at home.

This is a matter of state and local control; the federal government will accept the outcome without question. The difficulties involved in making the necessary arrangements are by no means insuperable.

Negroes and Army Officers.

From the New York Evening Post.

This war may not see negroes become soldiers on an unprecedented scale, but it will witness the employment of Negro officers in far greater numbers than ever before. In the Spanish-American war there were a number of negro captains, and there have been several negro majors—one, Charles Young, a graduate of West Point. Today 1,200 men are training in the negro officers' reserve camp at Fort Des Moines, Ia., and it is planned to officer the negro regiments raised under the selective draft law largely with these men—the colonels and, at least at the outset, the majors to be white. About 300 of these future officers were picked from regular army units and the whole camp is said to offer very promising material.

MANY GIRLS ARE SENSIBLE

Those Who Think and Act With Discretion Are Playing Important Part in World's Work.

Cynics have had so much to say in their caustic way about frivolous girls that a visitor from Mars, unaccustomed to our mode of life, might suspect there are no sensible girls on this planet. But those who go in and out of the homes of the people a great deal know there are girls who think, who reason and who act with wise discrimination, says a writer in the Salt Lake Herald-Republican.

Suppose there are those of languid or coquetish temperaments who spend idle hours in conjuring up romantic day dreams and who engage in flirtatious follies when they go abroad in public. They create more comment because they do most to lure the eye of admiration that is easily attracted by physical charms.

The domestic girl may not be less favored in the endowment of feminine graces, but being not so vain and having a profound regard for the more enduring attributes of human affection, her faculty of ratiocination schools her indifference to infatuation that is only shallow and transitory.

We have evidences everywhere of the girls who think and are doing a great part of the world's work. They have taken upon themselves an ever increasing share of the professions where thinking is essential to doing. They take an active interest in the educational, industrial and economic problems of the community, state and nation in which many of the most practical suggestions are made by girls and women who think. They are nobly assuming serious responsibilities imposed by war, as they will also in the mighty tasks that will come after the war. And the greatest blessing of all which sends a ray of hope through the mists of the present is that girls who think will become the dependable mothers of the future.

For Safety's Sake.

Two brothers who live in an East Lancashire manufacturing town were noted for being exceptionally well-served with nasal organs.

One of the ring spinners at the mill where they worked invited them to a wedding, and promised to send a cab for them, says London Tit-Bits.

The cab duly arrived, and the two brothers entered and planted themselves down, one at each window.

In order to create an impression during the drive to the wedding, the two brothers were looking out of the cab, one on either side, so that the people could see them.

All went well until the cab came to a rather narrow railway arch, which our travelers had to pass through. The cabman looked back to take his bearings, and seeing the two brothers' noses sticking out of the windows on either side, shouted:

"Put them elbows in, please!"

This year's sweet girl graduate is on the war path.

Would Give Him Exercise.

Former Congressman George I. Smith of Minneapolis is fond of hunting and takes great pride in the ownership of a costly setter dog of noble birth. One day an old man, who was acting as guide for the hunt, came near making a lifelong enemy of Smith by criticizing the dog's technique in the field.

"The dog's perfectly all right," declared Smith, indignantly. "I wouldn't trade him for any dog I ever saw, only he doesn't get quite enough exercise. I'm busy and have to keep him penned up a good deal. He ought to have more exercise and that would improve his hunting."

"Has he got any fleas?" inquired the old man.

"Should say not," replied Smith, insulted. "That dog has his bath every week the same as I hope you do."

"Why don't you give him a few fleas?"

"What do you mean, give him fleas? Why should I want a fine dog like him to have fleas?"

"Well," opined the guide, thoughtfully, "they'd give him exercise."—St. Louis Republic.

Successful Sale Of Morningside Lots

Morningside Lot Sale Was a Success From All Points—Good Building Sites Are Picked Up By Eager Buyers—21' Lots Sold In Short Time

Despite the threatening weather with overcast clouds, the Morningside Lot Sale Tuesday was a wonderful success in every way. The sale began at about ten o'clock in the morning and closed about three o'clock in the afternoon. During this short space of time 21 lots of the 36 were sold to the highest bidders.

It is estimated that there were about three hundred people present at the sale. It is supposed that a much larger crowd would have been in attendance if the weather had looked more favorable. However it did not rain until after the sale.

The Klemme Band furnished music thru-out the sale. At intervals the management gave away handsome prizes to the ones drawing a lucky number. Dinner was served on the grounds at noon by the Ladies' Aid Society of the English M. E. church and they are to be complimented on the good lunch they served for the small price of 25 cents.

The promoters of Morningside did not overlook the auctioneers. They secured the services of three very able men:—Col. N. T. Thompson of Rockwell City, Col. R. J. Babcock of Des Moines, and Col. B. A. Reemstma, our local auctioneer. This corps of auctioneers were very fair and square in every respect and won the confidence and support of the audience.

The Klemme Band was out in full uniform, every member present. They broke the record for good music and were at their best.

The sale was started out by Dr. Missman purchasing the first lot offered at $315. The sale started out with a snap and continued so throughout. Following are the buyers of the lots and the price paid:

Dr. Missman, $315; B. Borchers bought 3 lots at $325 each; John Terhufen bought 2 lots at $400 each; W. C. Kraus bought two lots at $355 each; John Sandersfelt bought three lots at $380 each; Dr. L. R. Parsons one lot at $380; R. S. Wilson one lot at $320 and one at $270. Fred Kluckhohn one lot at $285; Ben Schwichtenberg two lots at $295 each, Chas. G. Schmidt one lot at $265; M. Croner one lot at $385; Ben Swalve two lots at $280 each. These lots are the choice of the bunch and are all well located. We might add that streets have all been laid out and cement side-walks are all put in, which feature ads much to the value of these lots.

Those receiving the free prizes are:

Mrs. Olive Voiles, Belmond, $30 Brass Bed.

Mrs. A. R. White, Klemme, $8 Rocker.

Joe Smith, Meservey, $15 Rocker.

Frank Grue zmacher, Klemme, $20 Morris Chair.

Allie White, Klemme, $40 9x12 Rug.

Rose Maitland, Garner, $40 Kitchen Cabinet.

The managers, Arthur Wellemeyer, Paul Griesemer and George Kluckhohn are to be congratulated on the success of the sale. It was through their personal work, the advertising, and the fine way in which they planned and laid out the lots that gives to Klemme as fine an addition as can be found in the State of Iowa. They are all good boosters for Klemme and are anxious to see Klemme ahead of the neighboring towns. They have laid out a beautiful home site and it is now up to the lot buyers to do the rest—build homes.

Taking all together this is another step in our slogan:

"WATCH KLEMME GROW"

LETTER OF APPRECIATION

We, the undersigned, wish to thank the citizens of Klemme for the box of cigars and the collection which they took up and presented us with as we went through Klemme last Thursday on our way to Camp Dodge.

IOWA, GREATEST COMMONWEALTH

Governor W. L. Harding Calls Attention to the Hawkeye State with Many Leading Facts.

By W. L. Harding, Governor.

There are 2,358,066 people in Iowa, of whom 2,093,897 are native born American citizens, 48,115 of British origin, 20,239 of Norwegian, 25,683 of Swedish, 12,638 of Dutch, 88,450 of German, 7,655 of Austrian, 9,500 of Bohemian and 1,300 of Hungarian origin.

There are 31,374,756 acres of land devoted to agriculture in the state, f which 9,749,756 acres are in corn, 5,-199,269 acres in oats, 9,461,680 acres in pasturage and 7,234,777 acres devoted to other agricultural pursuits. Of the entire acreage less than five per cent is in waste land.

There are $1,000,000,000 of taxable wealth in the state. There are $447,-054,146.17 in State and Savings bank deposits.

There were in 1915, 1,397,775 head of horses, 4,188,956 head of cattle, 83,230 head of hogs and 575,074 head of sheep, and our crop service gives us for quotation from Surveyor's survey or estimates the matured or prospective yield of crops for the present season as follows:

Corn, 400,000,000 bushels;
Oats, 260,000,000 bushels;
Wheat, (winter) 2,500,000 bushels; (spring) 3,600,000;
Hay, 3,800,000 tons.

We produced from the earth 7,217,-979 tons of coal during 1916, and 480,-404 tons of gypsum in 1914. The total value of stone and clay products in 1914 was $6,404,995.

There have been manufactured in Iowa products worth over $300,000,000 during the past year.

There are 9,948 miles of steam railroads and 491 miles of interurban lines in Iowa and their assessed valuation is $79,865,593 for the steam roads and $430,186 for the interurban lines.

There are 243,000 automobiles, or one for each nine persons in the state.

There are 707 approved and 213 non-approved grade schools, 11,500 common schools, not graded, 363 accredited high schools, 48 academies and parochial schools and 23 recognized institutions authorized to confer the degree of Bachelor of Arts or its equivalent in Iowa. There are 306,340 pupils in the rural schools; there are 219,239 pupils in the cities and towns.

There are, or were in 1915, 3975 churches in the state divided in 28 denominations. The value of their property was $47,741,451.

Expenditure for schools and their maintenance, for churches and their maintenance, are not ahead of the expenditures on behalf of public improvements for roads and highways, court houses, and other physical improvements.

Some of our sister states in friendly rivalry, particularly some of the ones that have benefited from our production and exportation of the finest of citizens, have poked fun at us on account of the fact that, whereas in 1890 our population was 1,911,-896; in 1895, 2,058,069; in 1900, 2,-231,853; in 1905, 2,210,050; in 1910, 2,224,771; and in 1915, 2,358,066, we once showed a falling off in population. But no one has ever said that the current of effectiveness, thrift and industry ran low or that we are producing or have ever produced a smaller volume or fewer benefits to the world than have been produced in this or any other state at any prior time.

But it is not merely money, or money's worth, nor the census, nor tax valuation which tells the whole story of our state. We have 941 newspapers published in the state, all of which are in the English language with the exception of two, which are in Swedish, four in Norwegian, two in Danish, twenty-seven in German and five in Dutch.

In valor the State of Iowa is entitled to rank with any of the sister states. She furnished to the Mexican War one Regiment with ten companies. To the Civil War, 78,059 men, and to the Spanish-American War and Philippine Insurrection four Regiments of Infantry and two batteries, approximately 4500 men.

But really marvelous as are the material terms in which the state of Iowa is defined today, and wonderful as are the attainments and the gifts of comfort and luxury possessed by or within the grasp of, every living individual within her beneficent boundaries, this has not always been our situation. Take a glance backward

Rhine wine nearly four centuries old was submitted the other day to a critical test of a committee of connoisseurs at Speyer, Germany. In that ancient cathedral city there is a "wine museum" to which the king of Bavaria has donated some bottles, the contents of which date back to the time of the reformation and the 30-years war. The solemn business of tasting these venerable vintages was carried out with due decorum Some brands dating back to 1728, 1631 and 1540 were found to have lost all boquet. The committee of experts afterwards proudly reported that they had tasted wines of five successive centuries at one session, an unprecedented feat, they say

After war orders for typewriters are already being booked in Austria in large numbers, says the Berlin Lokal Anzeiger, which adds that the Austrian depot of an American company is making special offers on machines for post war delivery on an initial deposit of $50 The German typewriter makers are unable to supply machines under six months owing to scarsity of labor and lack of materials. Nevertheless they are overwhelmed with orders, one firm having as many as 10,000 on its books An unavoidable result of this state of affairs is a reckless and not always over honest traffic in second hand machines, at prices far exceeding those for new ones.

The Dutch general staff as well as one or two foreign military attaches, are evincing considerable interest in a new armor material devised by an inventor at The Hague, Netherlands The principal on which it as based is that of distributing the pressure of projectiles and explosives as rapidly as possible The armor consists of a system of double plates with more or less space between them filled with a material that is very similar to sand but is of extremely fine grain and at the same time extraordinarily hard

The elephant, apparently invariably, and the horse commonly, sleep standing This is really astonishing Besides the difficulty of maintaining the balance of the body during long periods of unconsciousness it would seem that there must be some necessity for resting the muscles of the legs. CONVICT SHOT AS ANOTHER RESISTS

Riots at Ft. Madison Result in Death of One Convict and Injury to Guard.

Fort Madison, Ia., Sept. 23.—Trouble in the Iowa state penientiary early Wednesday resulted in the death of an inmate, George G. Bruce, No. 10820, and the serious injury of Deputy Warden James S. Taylor.

At 6:55 o'clock Inmate Hunter, No. 10961, refused to work, and Deputy Warden Taylor ordered Guard W. G. Enderle to put the man in solitary confinement.

The guard took the convict to the door of the hole, and when reaching for his keys the prisoner grabbed the guard's cane and rushed at him (Enderle). Guard Jim Lowe came on the scene at this moment and Enderle told him to get the deputy. Lowe went for the deputy, who came at once.

Another inmate, Will Johnson, colored, No. 11087, evidently had witnessed the trouble from the chapel, and as Deputy Taylor came up to Guard Enderle and his charge he jumped at the deputy, striking him over the left eye and nose with a heavy "3x2" square oak club about four feet in length. Guard Enderle at once shot at the negro, Johnson, but missed him, the shot striking and killing Convict George W. Bruce, who was in a tent 15 feet away

George Bruce, No. 10820, the dead convict, was sent to the penitentiary from Hardin county to serve a 10-year sentence for larceny

Will Johnson, colored, No. 11087, is serving a 30-year sentence for murderous assault on a guard at Anamosa at a time when he was serving a five-year larceny term. His correct name is Humphrey Alexander a Georgia negro.

NEAL JONES NOW MANAGING EDITOR OF NEW YORK PAPER

Des Moines, Ia., Sept. 22 Twelve years ago Neal Jones took a position as reporter on the Des Moines Register and Leader staff, after having served an apprenticeship in newspaper work during his university course at Iowa City and as editor of the Muscatine News-Tribune.

Tuesday he stopped in Des Moines for a day's visit. He is on his way to New York city to become managing editor of the New York Tribune.

Mr. Jones made a name for himself on the Register and Leader by his clever feature stories. After leaving this newspaper, he worked for the Capital and the News and then became city clerk of Des Moines, but the inclination toward journalism was stronger than politics.

Mr Jones went from Des Moines to the Cleveland Press, and later became managing editor of the Omaha Daily News. He resigns his position with the latter paper to go to New York.

As managing editor of the Tribune he will be in direct charge of all editorial departments except the editorial page Gil Harrison, of Sioux City, is the father of Mrs. Jones.

Protesting vigorously that "my rights as a citizen are being taken from me" Schuirmann announced to the 1,500 people present that the meeting was called off. Of this number two-thirds seemed to be with the authorities. As Schuirmann stated to the crowd, "this meeting cannot be held by order of the governor," there was a five-minute demonstration, and there were cat calls and hoots for Schuirmann. No arrests were made.

WEATHER FAVORABLE FOR CORN MATURING

Local Damage Done to Crops in Lowlands Only—Canning Factories Rush Orders.

Des Moines, Sept. 21.—The week was favorable for rushing the corn crop toward maturity. The temperature was considerably below the normal on the first day, but since then dry, warm weather has prevailed. The frost on the 11th did considerable damage in the northeastern counties, but the first estimates as to the extent of damage were evidently overdrawn.

There is no doubt, however, but what the damage was severe in certain localities, especially along streams and in many low places, but damage was prevented in some of the river and creek valleys by fog, which prevailed on that morning. There was little or no injury on uplands, and while 30 or 40 per cent of the corn in the northeastern counties was frosted, not more than 5 per cent of it will be unmerchantable. The frost also did some damage to late potatoes, garden truck, buckwheat and beans. Silo filling has begun and some corn has been cut for fodder

Canning factories are running to full capacity on sweet corn, which is yielding about three tons per acre. Rapid progress is being made in preparing ground for fall wheat and some wheat has been sown. Fall varieties of apples are being harvested with fairly good yields More rain would be beneficial for pastures and to keep the ground in condition for plowing

It was not the first time apparently that Count Von Bernstorff had sought to influence congressional action, this being eloquently proclaimed by his reference to "former occasions."

Organization Not Named.

The name of the organization through which the German government had sought to influence congressional action, the manner in which the money used for this purpose was expended the previous instances and the individuals carrying on propaganda although not disclosed

They presumably are known to the state department and to the department of justice, whose bureau of investigation for more than three years has been conducting a rigid surveillance of German activities in this country.

Reports Lead to Count.

Records of the department of justice are overflowing with reports from hundreds of agents concerning German intrigues here many of which led to the German embassy and some of which resulted in the recall, at President Wilson's request of Captains Boy-Ed and Von Papen, the German naval and military attaches.

Up to this time Boy-Ed and Von Papen had appeared as the master spirits of German propaganda here. Intimations that German plots and intrigues were directed not by them but by Count von Bernstorff with the full approval of Berlin heretofor had been met by officials with silence. For months past however, there have been many indications that the American government had established Bernstorff's direct connection with much of the German secret work conducted here, and that there was ample basis for a request for his recall months before the diplomatic break with Germany.

Supervised Spies' Work.

Up to the time of Boy-Ed's and Von Papen's recall Von Bernstorff apparently, for diplomatic reasons, had sought to remain clear personally of connections with the great volume of pro-German activities conducted here by his attaches. From disclosures concerning Boy-Ed's and Von Papen's manifold activities officials apparently obtained the impression that Von Bernstorff, in most instances had left the conduct of German propaganda in the hands of his subordinates with only casual supervision of their activities if any.

Intimations have been more or less frequent, however at trials and other proceedings instituted against pro-German agents in this country that von Bernstorff had at least a general knowledge of the work they were conducting. In most instances this knowledge would appear to be only of a general nature. In a few cases leads pointing toward his personal knowledge of specific instances of German violations of American neutrality were not publicly developed. The government's purpose in not following these leads with public disclosure was to permit of closer examination into the ambassador's actual participation in them.

Peace Societies Suspected.

The suggestion was made that by "organization the ambassador might have meant any one of the different so-called peace societies that were active at that time, but it was learned that statement officials do not know what the ambassador did mean. It was assumed, however, that he referred to an organization he had set up, although officials were inclined to believe that the method of influencing was the using of pacifists to rake out the chestnuts rather than to any direct subordination of congressmen.

At least one of the most active organizations flooded Washington with telegrams just prior to the war and during the days immediately following the break in relations, calculated to influence congressmen to vote against any measure looking to war with Germany. It always has been assumed that Teutonic agents were largely responsible for these activities.

Secretary Lansing adhered to his determination not to discuss this latest disclosure and refused to reveal the manner in which the message to Berlin came into the hand of the government. While the United States was one of the neutrals, certain privileges had been extended to the German embassy in the transmission of messages, but only after their contents had been made known.

Sent In Irregular Way.

"No, this was not one that passed through this government's channels of communication," was the smiling reply of an official at the state department when it was suggested that Ambassador Bernstorff might have added to his duplicity the irony of using the United States as a transmitter of the message. It is known that the message reached Berlin, but whether the German foreign office ever was able to get a reply to America is not known. It was indicated that it came into possession of the state department some time after it was sent, perhaps after the break in relations and possibly after the declaration of war. It was pointed out that knowledge of the ambassador's action at the time it was taken would have precipitated more immediate action, but the suggestion was answered by the intimation that the mass of evidence being gathered then was of such a character that it might not have been considered necessary or opportune to give undue importance then to a knowledge of the ambassador's duplicity.

Reference to "former occasions" on which the ambassador had asked for and used money in influencing congress is in line with other evidence now in possession of the state department, showing the extent to which the German government had gone in building up an organization for propaganda and espionage.

Little surprise over the disclosures was manifested at the capital.

"In view of the fact that charges of large, expenditures of money in German propaganda have not been denied," said Senator Reed, "this new evidence is cumulative. The money evidently was spent in propaganda."

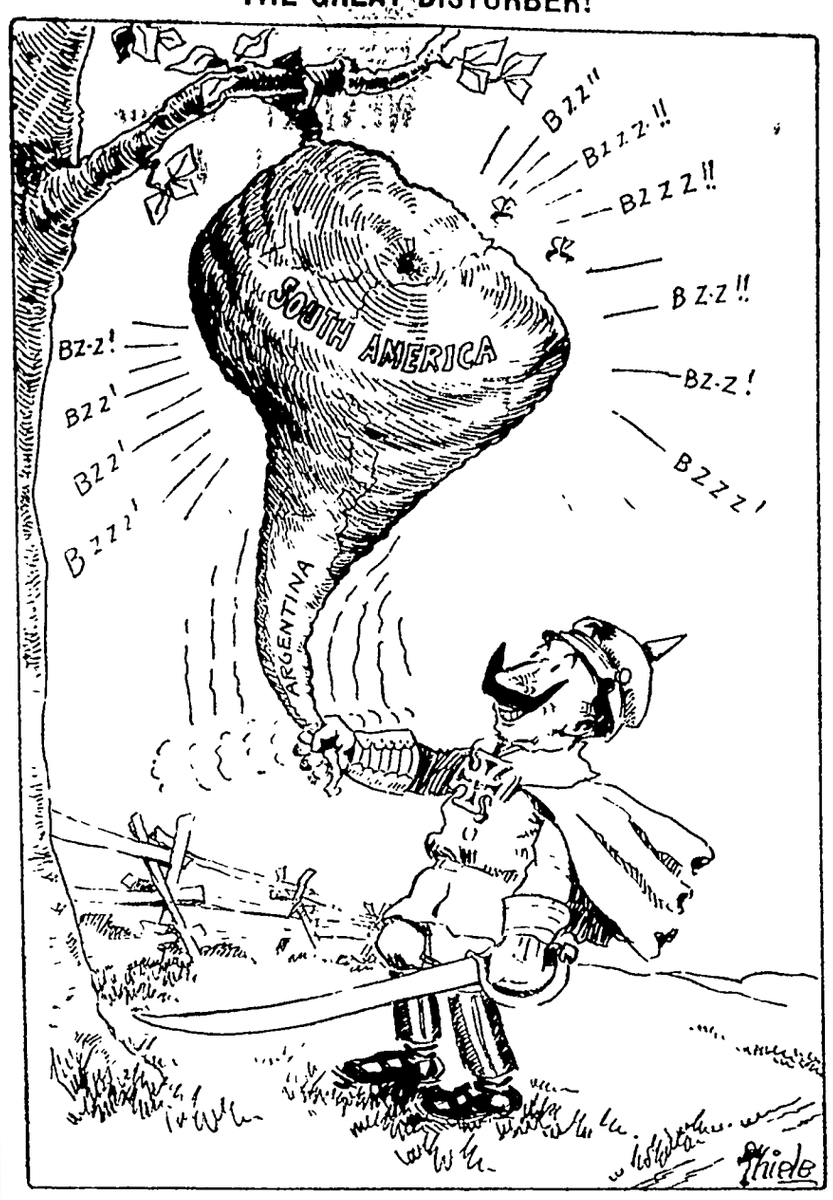
THE GREAT DISTURBER!



KELLY MAY HAVE IMAGINED CRIME

Alienist Testifies Minister Was Mentally Unbalanced and Might Fail to Differentiate.

Red Oak Ia., Sept. 22.—Evidence showing that Rev. Lyn George J. Kelly is a paranoiac and might imagine that he committed such a crime as the Villisca ax murders was produced in the murder trial at Red Oak today.

Dr. A. W. Fitzsimmons, of Omaha, an alienist is now on the stand for the defense. Dr. Fitzsimmons treated Kelly a year after the Villisca tragedy at which time the minister was attending the theological seminary in Omaha. The alienist said a paranoiac might not be able to discriminate between an act which he had himself committed and one attributed to him by others.

On cross examination, the doctor admitted that a paranoiac might labor under the delusion that he had a mission to perform. He admitted that such persons have been known to believe they heard voices and commands.

Heard No Conversation.

The defense scored a point today when Charles Pontie Burlington conductor on the train which conveyed Kelly from Villisca to Macedonia on the morning of the murder, testified he heard no discussion of the Villisca tragedy in the coaches. He did not remember of seeing Kelly on the train and declared he heard no loud or excitable talking sufficient to attract his attention to any particular person.

Two witnesses for the state, who claim to have been on that train on the morning of June 10, 1912, Mr. and Mrs. H. Simons, testified Kelly was talking loudly about the ax murder.

The defense points out that had Kelly been talking of the tragedy, the conductor would have either observed him, or would have heard the news when it was repeated by passengers.

The defense claims the conversation took place one week later. The conductor said he did not hear of the murder until that afternoon.

Just before adjournment, the defense called the first of a number of witnesses who are prepared to tell of seeing Albert Jones, son of ex-Senator F. F. Jones, and Bert McCall, driving south from Villisca at high speed early on the morning of June 10.

Calls for Outline.

Before the first witness, Frank Archer jr., of Omaha, was permitted to testify, the court announced the defense must present a written outline of such evidence to permit an intelligent ruling on its relevancy. Archer says he will testify that about 5 a. m. on the morning of June 10, he met Albert Jones and Bert McCall on a road north of Villisca with a bulky object covered over with a blanket.

Detective Wilkerson, who has been investigating the ax murders for three years, has always contended that the ax man was spirited away from the Charnel house in an automobile.

The court room was jammed to capacity today. Examination of witnesses was conducted by Judge Sutton, during the early stages, while Attorney W. E. Mitchell was closeted with Mrs. Kelly and Detective Wilkerson in an ante-room.

John Montgomery, father of Mrs. Joe Moore, testified that his daughter had always kept the bacon supply in a closet of the room in which the Stillinger girls were found.

Question of Bacon.

On the morning of the murder, a small piece of bacon, wrapped in a flour sack was found at the foot of the bed upon which was found the corpses of the Stillinger girls.

The state has contended that Kelly got this bacon from a refrigerator, and expects to produce witnesses to show that at every place where Kelly has been incarcerated he has secreted bits of meat in his cell.

Two witnesses testified that the blood spots on the left limb of the oldest Stillinger girl, appeared to be underneath the skin and was, "the kind of a spot which could be found on any dead body."

The state has contended the spot in question was a blood smear caused by the murderer seizing his victim and has claimed this points to the fact that the ax man was a sexual pervert.

SLACKER AID CUTS THROAT

Enid Okla., Sept. 22- The story of the organization of the 'Jones family,' its affiliation with the Working Class union and I. W. W. and connections through a Chicago office with German agents was told here late yesterday at the trial of 11 members of the Jones family" from Pottawatomie and Cleveland counties by a witness named Holmes who claimed to have been present as a government agent at the organization's first meeting.

At this meeting, Holmes said, the American flag was torn to shreds and called a 'filthy rag."

AMERICAN ENGINEERS ATTACKED BY GERMANS

Regiment Taking Supplies to French Fired Upon by Airmen With Machine Guns.

By the Associated Press.

American Training Camp in France, (Thursday), Sept. 20.—By day and night the men of the American regiment of engineers which has taken over an important line of strategic railways, are putting tons upon tons of ammunition and other supplies to the French army units operating against the Germans.

Within the past few nights a heavy train of supplies, hurrying toward the front, was attacked by several enemy planes. None of the bombs came dangerously close, but every time the fire box of the engine was opened for stoking, the planes swooped down upon the train and spattered it with steel jacketed bullets.

The fire got so hot that eventually the train was stopped, the crew taking refuge beneath the engine. Relating their experience afterward, these trainmen rather "swanked" about it over their inexperienced brothers.

HUGE GERMAN LOSSES IN FLANDERS REVEALED

By the Associated Press.

Grand Headquarters of the French Army in France, Sept. 22.—Thirty-five German divisions have been engaged in the fighting in Flanders during the course of the six weeks from July 18 to August 9, eight of which are still in the front line. Nineteen have been withdrawn and now are undergoing reformation in rest camps, the other eight being assigned to defend quiet sectors along the fighting front and elsewhere.

The average duration of the occupation of front trenches by German divisions before their withdrawal is only eight days, in which time the casualties became so heavy that their retirement is compulsory. During a similar period of the Somme battle a year ago, 34 German divisions were engaged, 22 of which were withdrawn as a consequence of casualties after 12 days' fighting. During the Verdun fighting, which began on August 20, general divisions, including reserve divisions, were withdrawn after fighting from a minimum of two days to a maximum of four days. Eight of these divisions were regarded as exhausted. Six new divisions which replaced them, now occupy the line.

AUSTRALIANS WIN YEAR'S BEST GAIN

British Hold All the Advances Made Yesterday and Increase Them by Further Local Attacks.

GERMANS TIRE OF DEATH

Counter Attacks Result Only in Adding to the Slaughter Caused by British Arms.

London, Sept. 22.—Artillery fire late in the day and airplanes enabled the British troops to anticipate further counter attacks. At night the enemy, exhausted, did not counter attack and the British were able to consolidate their positions.

By Associated Press.

British Front in France and Belgium, Sept. 22.—Today from the newly acquired enemy stronghold, known as 'Anzac," southwest of Zonnebeke, flutters the Australian banner, a symbol of the greatest victory which has marked British operations in the western theater in the past year, not excluding that at Messines. Southwest of Gheluvelt the Germans are holding a position which the British desired and today at 9 30 o'clock, Field Marshal Haig began a local attack here.

GAIN ON EIGHT-MILE FRONT.

By Associated Press.

Today found the British in Flanders holding all the valuable positions gained in their attack of yesterday, when they surged forward on an eight mile front on both sides of the Ypres-Menin road, penetrating the German lines more than a mile in places and capturing prisoners in excess of 2,000.

All reports emphasize the completness of the success the British troops achieved. They hold Veldhoek, Zevenkote and numerous strategically important farms and wooded tracts which had been heavily fortified by the Germans, but which were captured by the resistless British sweep.

Slaughter Stops Counter Blows.

Late yesterday the Germans began to counter attack, but every thrust was effectively dealt with by British guns, which wiped out the advancing lines of German infantry. The heavy casualties sustained in these fruitless attacks evidently impelled the German commander to order their cessation, for there were no repetitions of them during the night and the British were able to consolidate their newly won ground without disturbance.

In some sectors the British continued their offensive tactics during the evening. Local attacks, notably northeast of Langemarck, resulted in the clearing out of a number of strong points to which some German forces were clinging. Correspondents' dispatches today report the continuance of similar tactics at night, when the new line was considerably improved in strength.

Today's advices further announce the resumption of British attacks during this morning southwest of Gheluvelt, where a position desired by the British was still held by the Germans. This was assaulted by British forces, which advanced to the attack at 9:30 o'clock.

From none of the other fighting fronts were there indications in the morning's dispatches of operations of more than ordinary importance.

BERLIN ADMITS LOSSES.

Berlin, Sept. 22.—British troops at Passchendaele and Gheluvelt, on the Belgian front, at times yesterday pressed forward for a distance of more than two-thirds of a mile, says the official statement issued today by the German general staff. West of Passchendaele the British were pressed back by a counter attack. North of the Menin-Ypres road a portion of the terrain remained in the hands of the British.

The statement also says that after fluctuating fighting between Langemarck and Hollebeke, the British were able to advance for a depth of two-thirds of a mile.

TIGHTEN SQUEEZERS ON LENS.

Canadian Headquarters in France, Lens is unrelenting and the Germans are being literally squeezed out of the town. Posts have been pushed out into No Man's Land again in the region of St. Laurent and the ground, in defense of which the Germans fought fiercely a month ago, has been occupied by us almost without a struggle.

By the Associated Press.

British Headquarters in France, Sept. 22.—Pressure on the defenses of Thursday, Sept. 20.—The scene of the present British offensive includes one of the most important and strongest parts of the German line in this section and has been marked by some of the most bitter fighting of the war since the allies, seven weeks ago, began their drive which has become known as the battle of Flanders. The wooded elevations east and southeast of Ypres, among which are such dominating positions as Glencorse wood and Inverness copse, were the vital points and the Germans had made their defense here as nearly impregnable as they were able, being determined to retain them without regard to the cost. The battles of the past few weeks bear witness to the strength of the defenses at these points.

Fight Over Famous Ground.

The crucial sector may be said to begin with the ridge known as Anzac, which lies about a mile southwest of Zonnebeke. Southwest of Anzac is Nun's wood and just east of this is the famous forest known as Polygon wood. When the British, in August, fought their way forward to Polygon wood, they found Nun's wood so flooded that they were forced to go around it and the ground here still presents great difficulties to the movement of troops, because of the swampy condition. Nun's wood merges into Glencorse wood on the south and a little further down and astride the Ypres-Menin highway is Inverness copse, of undying fame. Between Glencorse wood and Inverness is an open stretch of solid ground of some 400 yards, and here the Germans had built great steel and concrete redoubts, whose machine guns dominated the southern part of Glencorse wood and the northern section of Inverness. Below Inverness are Dumbarton lakes and the ground about them is pitted with shell craters, which are filled with water. The paths and trenches here were wiped out by artillery fire and the shell holes are so close together that there are no spaces to walk around them.

Rhine wine nearly four centuries old was submitted the other day to a critical test of a committee of connoisseurs at Speyer, Germany. In that ancient cathedral city there is a "wine museum" to which the king of Bavaria has donated some bottles, the contents of which date back to the time of the reformation and the 30-years war The solemn business of tasting these venerable vintages was carried out with due decorum Some brands dating back to 1728 1631 and 1540 were found to have lost all boquet. The committee of experts afterwards proudly reported that they had tasted wines of five successive centuries at one session an unprecedented feat they say

After war orders for typewriters are already being booked in Austria in large numbers, says the Berlin Lokal Anzeiger, which adds that the Austrian depot of an American company is making special offers on machines for post war delivery on an initial deposit of $.0 The German typewriter makers are unable to supply machines under six months owing to scarsity of labor and lack of materials Nevertheless they are overwhelmed with orders one firm having as many as 10,000 on its books An unavoidable result of this state of affairs is a reckless and not always over honest traffic in second hand machines, at prices far exceeding those for new ones.
